Perseus in the Tent of Paulus Emilius.

Published Feb. 1st, 1754, by I. & P. Knapton.
THE ANCIENT HISTORY
OF THE EGYPTIANS, CARTHAGINIANS, ASSYRIANS,
BABYLONIANS, MEDES and PERSIANS, MACEDONIANS, AND GRECIANS.

By Mr. ROLLIN, Late Principal of the University of Paris, now Professor of Eloquence in the Royal College, and Member of the Royal Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres.

Translated from the French.

VOL. VII.

THE FIFTH EDITION,
Illustrated with COPPER-PLATES, and a Set of MAPS of Ancient Geography coloured, drawn by the Sieur D'Auville, Geographer to the King of France.

LONDON:
Printed for J. Rivington, R. Baldwin, Hawes, Clarke and Collins, R. Horsfield, W. Johnston, W. Owen, T. Caslon, S. Crowder, C. Rivington, E. Law, Z. Stuart, Robinson and Roberts, and Newbery and Carnan.

MDCCCLXVIII.
Contents to Vol. VII.

BOOK XX.

ARTICLE I.

Abridgment of the history of the Jews, from Aristobulus, son of Hyrcanus, who first assumed the rank of king, to the reign of Herod the Great, the Idumæan

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sect.</th>
<th>Reign</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I.</td>
<td>Aristobulus the first, which lasted two years</td>
<td>ibid.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II.</td>
<td>Alexander Janæus, which continued twenty-seven years</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III.</td>
<td>Alexendra, the wife of Alexander Janæus, which continued nine years. Hyrcanus, her eldest son, is high-priest during that time</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV.</td>
<td>Aristobulus II. which continued six years</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V.</td>
<td>Hyrcanus II. which continued twenty-four years</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI.</td>
<td>Antigonus, of only two years duration</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ARTICLE II.

Abridgment of the history of the Parthians, from the establishment of that empire to the defeat of Crassus, which is related at large

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Article</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>II.</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ARTICLE III.

Abridgment of the history of the kings of Cappadocia, from the foundation of that kingdom to the time when it became a province of the Roman empire

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Article</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>III.</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

BOOK XXI.

ARTICLE I.

Sect. I. Hiero the second chosen captain-general by the Syracusans, and soon after appointed king. He makes an alliance with the Romans in the beginning of the first Punic war - - Page 79

II. Hiero's pacifick reign. He particularly favours agriculture. He applies the abilities of Archimedes, his relation, to the service of the publick, and causes him to make an infinite number of machines for the defence of a besieged place. He dies very old, and much regretted by the people - 86

ARTICLE II.

Sect. I. Hieronymus, grandson of Hiero, succeeds him, and causes him to be regretted by his vices and cruelty. He is killed in a conspiracy. Barbarous murder of the princesses. Hippocrates and Epicides possess themselves of the government of Syracuse, and declare for the Carthaginians, as Hieronymus had done - - 101

II. The consul Marcellus besieges Syracuse. The considerable losses of men and ships, occasioned by the dreadful machines of Archimedes, oblige Marcellus to change the siege into a blockade. He takes the city at length by means of his intelligence within it. Death of Archimedes, killed by a soldier who did not know him - - 116

ARTICLE III.

Sect. I. Tomb of Archimedes discovered by Cicero 133

II. Summary of the history of Syracuse - 136

III. Reflections upon the government and character of the Syracusans, and upon Archimedes - 139

BOOK
CONTENTS.

BOOK XXII.

ARTICLE I.

Sect. I. Mithridates, at twelve years old, ascends the throne of Pontus. He seizes Cappadocia and Bithynia, having first expelled their kings. The Romans re-establish them. He causes all the Romans in Asia minor to be put to the sword in one day. First war of the Romans with Mithridates, who had made himself master of Asia minor, and Greece, where he had taken Athens. Sylla is charged with this war. He besieges and retakes Athens. He gains three great battles against the generals of Mithridates. He grants that prince peace in the fourth year of the war. Library of Athens, in which were the works of Aristotle. Sylla causes it to be carried to Rome

Page 146

II. Second war against Mithridates, under Murena, of only three years duration. Mithridates prepares to renew the war. He concludes a treaty with Sertorius. Third war with Mithridates. Lucullus consul sent against him. He obliges him to raise the siege of Cyzicum, and defeats his troops. He gains a complete victory over him, and reduces him to fly into Pontus. Tragical end of the sisters and wives of Mithridates. He endeavours to retire to Tigranes his son-in-law. Lucullus regulates the affairs of Asia

175

III. Lucullus causes war to be declared with Tigranes, and marches against him. Vanity and ridiculous self-sufficiency of that prince. He loses a great battle. Lucullus takes Tigranocerta, capital of Armenia. He gains a second victory over the joint forces of Tigranes and Mithridates. Mutiny and revolt in the army of Lucullus

192

IV. Mithridates, taking advantage of the discord which had arose in the Roman army, recovers all his dominions.
CONTENTS.

dominions. Pompey is chosen to succeed Lucullus. He overthrows Mithridates in several battles. The latter flies in vain to Tigranes his son-in-law for refuge, who is engaged in a war with his own son. Pompey marches into Armenia against Tigranes, who comes to him and surrenders himself. Weary of pursuing Mithridates to no purpose, he returns into Syria, makes himself master of that kingdom, and puts an end to the empire of the Seleucides. He marches back to Pontus. Pharnaces makes the army revolt against his father Mithridates, who kills himself. That prince's character. Pompey's expeditions into Arabia and Judea, where he takes Jerusalem. After having reduced all the cities of Pontus, he returns to Rome, and receives the honour of a triumph.

BOOK XXIII.

Sect. I. Ptolomeus Auletes had been placed upon the throne of Egypt in the room of Alexander. He is declared the friend and ally of the Roman people by the credit of Cæsar and Pompey, which he purchases at a very great price. In consequence he loads his subjects with imposts. He is expelled the throne. The Alexandrians make his daughter Berenice queen. He goes to Rome, and by money obtains the voices of the heads of the commonwealth for his re-establishment. He is opposed by an oracle of the Sibyl's; notwithstanding which, Gabinius sets him upon the throne by force of arms, where he remains till his death. The famous Cleopatra and her brother, very young, succeed him.

II. Pothinus and Achillas, ministers of the young king, expel Cleopatra. She raises troops to re-establish herself. Pompey, after having been overthrown at Pharsalia, retires into Egypt. He is assassinated there.
there. Caesar, who pursued him, arrives at Alexandria, where he is informed of his death, which he seems to lament. He endeavours to reconcile the brother and sister, and for that purpose sends for Cleopatra, of whom he soon becomes enamoured. Great commotions arise at Alexandria, and several battles are fought between the Egyptians and Caesar's troops, wherein the latter have almost always the advantage. The king, having been drowned in fleeing after a sea-fight, all Egypt submits to Caesar. He sets Cleopatra, with her younger brother, upon the throne, and returns to Rome - Page 249

III. Cleopatra causes her young brother to be put to death, and reigns alone. The death of Julius Caesar having made way for the Triumvirate formed between Anthony, Lepidus, and young Caesar, called also Othavius, Cleopatra declares herself for the Triumvirs. She goes to Anthony at Tarsus, gains an absolute ascendant over him, and brings him with her to Alexandria. Anthony goes to Rome, where he espouses Othavia. He abandons himself again to Cleopatra, and after some expeditions returns to Alexandria, which he enters in triumph. He there celebrates the coronation of Cleopatra and her children. Open rupture between Caesar and Anthony. The latter repudiates Othavia. The two fleets put to sea. Cleopatra determines to follow Anthony. Battle of Actium. Cleopatra flies, and draws Anthony after her. Caesar's victory is compleat. He advances some time after against Alexandria, which makes no long resistance. Tragical death of Anthony and Cleopatra. Egypt is reduced into a province of the Roman empire - 263

Conclusion of the Ancient History - 295
Chronological Table - 299
General Index - 381

THE BOOK THE TWENTIETH.

THE

HISTORY

OF THE

Successors of Alexander

CONTINUED.

ARTICLE I.

Abridgment of the history of the Jews, from Aristobulus, son of Hyrcanus, who first assumed the rank of king, to the reign of Herod the Great, the Idumean.

As the history of the Jews is often intermixed with that of the kings of Syria and Egypt, I have taken care, as occasion offered, to relate of it what was most necessary and suitable to my subject. I shall add here what remains of that history to the reign of Herod the Great. The historian Josephus, who is in every one's hands, will satisfy the curiosity of such as are desirous of being more fully informed in it: Dean Prideaux, whom I have used here, may be also consulted to the same effect.

SECT. I. Reign of Aristobulus the first, which lasted two years.

Hyrcanus, high-priest and prince of the Jews (a), had left five sons at his death. The first was Aristobulus, the second Antigonus, the third

Vol. VII. B Alexander

(a) Joseph. Antiq. xiii. 19, &c. Id. de bell. Jud. 1. 3.
Alexander Jannæus, the fourth’s name is unknown. The fifth was called Absalom.

Aristobulus, as the eldest, succeeded his father in the high-priesthood and temporal sovereignty. As soon as he saw himself well established, he assumed the diadem and title of king, which none of those who had governed Judæa from the Babylonish captivity, had done besides himself. The conjuncture seemed favourable for that design. The kings of Syria and Egypt, who were alone capable of opposing it, were weak princes, involved in domestic troubles and civil wars, little secure upon the throne, and not maintaining themselves long in the possession of it. He knew the Romans were much inclined to authorize the dismembering and dividing the dominions of the Grecian kings, in order to weaken and keep them low in comparison with themselves. Besides, it was natural for Aristobulus to take the advantage of the victories and acquisitions made by his ancestors, who had given an assured and uninterrupted establishment to the Jewish nation, and enabled it to support the dignity of a king amongst its neighbours.

Aristobulus’s mother, in virtue of Hyrcanus’s will, pretended to the government; but Aristobulus was the strongest, and put her in prison, where he caused her to be starved to death. For his brothers, as he very much loved Antigonus the eldest of them, he gave him at first a share in the government; but some small time after, upon a false accusation, put him to death. He confined the other three in a prison during his life.

When Aristobulus had fully possessed himself of the authority his father had enjoyed, (b) he entered into a war with the Ituræans, and after having subjected the greatest part of them, he obliged them to embrace Judaism, as Hyrcanus had the Idumæans some years before. He gave them the alternative, either to be circumcised and profess the Jewish religion, or to quit their country and seek a settlement elsewhere.

(b) Joseph. Antiq. xiii. 19, 1. Id. de bel. Jud. i. 3.
where. They chose to stay, and comply with what was required of them, and were incorporated with the Jews, both as to spirituals and temporal. This practice became a fundamental maxim with the Asmoneans. It shews, that they had not a just idea of religion at that time, which does not impose itself by force, and which ought not to be received but voluntarily and by persuasion. Ituræa, inhabited by the people in question, was a part of Cælosoyria, on the north-east frontier of Israel, between the inheritance of the half tribe of Manasseh on the other side of the Jordan, and the territory of Damascus.

A distemper obliged Aristobulus to return from Ituræa to Jerusalem, and to leave the command of the army to his brother Antigonus, to make an end of the war he had begun. The queen and her cabal, who envied Antigonus the king’s favour, took the advantage of this illness, to alienate the king against him by false reports and vile calumnies. Antigonus soon returned to Jerusalem after the successes by which he had terminated the war. His entry was a kind of triumph. The feast of the tabernacles was then celebrating. He went directly to the temple with his guards, completely armed as he had entered the city, without giving himself time to change any part of his equipage. This was made a crime with the king; who, otherwise prejudiced against him, sent him orders to disarm himself, and come to him as soon as possible; conceiving, if he refused to obey, it was a proof of some bad design; in that case he gave orders that he should be killed. The person sent by Aristobulus, was gained by the queen and her cabal, and told him the order quite differently; that the king desired to see him completely armed as he was. Antigonus went directly to wait on him; and the guards who saw him come in his arms, obeyed their orders, and killed him.

Aristobulus, having discovered all that had passed, was violently affected with it, and inconsolable for his death.
death. Tormented with remorse of conscience for this murder, and that of his mother, he led a miserable life, and expired at last in the highest grief and despair.

Sect. II. Reign of Alexander Jannæus, which continued twenty-seven years.

SALOME, the wife of Aristobulus (a), immediately after his death, took the three princes out of the prison, into which they had been put by her husband. Alexander Jannæus, the eldest of the three, was crowned. He put his next brother to death, who had endeavoured to deprive him of the crown. As for the third, named Absalom, who was of a peaceable disposition, and who had no thoughts but of living in tranquillity as a private person (b), he granted him his favour, and protected him during his whole life. No more is said of him, than that he gave his daughter in marriage to the youngest son of his brother Alexander, and that he served him against the Romans at the siege of Jerusalem, in which he was made prisoner forty-two years after, when the temple was taken by Pompey.

Whilst all this passed, the two kings of Syria, of whom Grypus reigned at Antioch, and Antiochus of Cyzicum at Damascus, made a cruel war upon each other, although they were brothers. Cleopatra and Alexander the youngest of her sons reigned in Egypt, and Ptolemy Lathyrus the eldest in Cyprus.

Alexander Jannæus, some time after he returned to Jerusalem, and had taken possession of the throne, had set a good army on foot, which passed the Jordan, and formed the siege of Gadara. At the end of ten months, having made himself master of that city, he took several other very strong places, situated also on the other side of the Jordan. But not being sufficiently upon his guard in his return, he was beat by the enemy, and lost ten thousand men, with all the spoils he

(a) Joseph. Antiq. xiii. 20. Id. de bel. Jud. 1. 3. (b) Id. Antiq. xiv. 8.
he had taken, and his own baggage. He returned to Jerusalem in the highest affliction for this loss, and the shame with which it was attended. He had even the mortification to see, that many people, instead of lamenting his misfortune, took a malignant joy in it. For from the quarrel of Hyrcanus with the Pharisees, they had always been the enemies of his house, and especially of this Alexander. And as they had drawn almost the whole people into their party, they had so strongly prejudiced and inflamed them against him, that all the disorders and commotions, with which his whole reign was embroiled, flowed from this source.

This loss, great as it was, did not prevent his going to seize Raphia and Anthedon, when he saw the coast of Gaza without defence, after the departure of Lathyrus. Those two posts, that were only a few miles from Gaza, kept it in a manner blocked up, which was what he proposed when he attacked them. He had never forgiven the inhabitants of Gaza for calling in Lathyrus against him, and giving him troops, which had contributed to his gaining the fatal battle of Jordan, and he earnestly sought all occasions to avenge himself upon them.

As soon as his affairs would permit, he came with a numerous army to besiege their city. Apollodorus, the governor of it, defended the place a whole year with a valour and prudence that acquired him great reputation. His own brother Lyssimachus could not see his glory without envy; and that base passion induced him to assassinate the governor. That wretch afterwards associated with some others as bad as himself, and surrendered the city to Alexander. Upon his entrance, it was thought by his behaviour and the orders he gave, that he intended to use his victory with clemency and moderation. But as soon as he saw himself master of all the posts, and that there was nothing to oppose him, he gave his soldiers permission to kill, plunder, and destroy; and immediately all the barbarity that could be imagined was exercised upon that unfortunate city. The pleasure of revenge cost cost him very dear. For the inhabitants of Gaza defended themselves like men in despair, and killed him almost as many of his people as they were themselves. But at length he satiated his brutal revenge, and reduced that ancient and famous city to an heap of ruins; after which he returned to Jerusalem. This war employed him a year.

Some time after the people affronted him in the most heinous manner (d). At the feast of the tabernacles, whilst he was in the temple, offering a solemn sacrifice, in quality of high-priest, upon the altar of burnt-offerings, they threw lemons at his head, calling him a thousand injurious names, and amongst the rest giving him that of slave; a reproach which sufficiently argued, that they looked upon him as unworthy of the crown and pontificate. This was an effect of what Eleazer had presumed to advance. That the mother of Hyrcanus had been a captive. These indignities enraged Alexander to such a degree, that he attacked those insolent people in person, at the head of his guards, and killed to the number of six thousand of them. Seeing how much the Jews were disaffected in regard to him, he was afraid to trust his person any longer to them, and used foreign troops for his guard, whom he caused to come from Pisidia and Cilicia. Of these he formed a body of six thousand men, that attended him every where.

When Alexander saw the storm which had rose against him a little appeased by the terror of the revenge he had taken for it, he turned his arms against the enemy abroad. After having obtained some advantages over them, he fell into an ambuscade, wherein he lost the greatest part of his army, and escaped himself with great difficulty. At his return to Jerusalem, the Jews, incensed at this defeat, revolted against him. They flattered themselves, that they should find him so much weakened and dejected by his loss, that they should find no difficulty in completing his destruction, which they had so long desired.

(d) Joseph. Antiq. xiii. 21.
fired. "Alexander, who wanted neither application nor valour, and who besides had a more than common capacity, soon found troops to oppose them. A civil war ensued between him and his subjects, which continued six years, and occasioned great misfortunes to both parties. The rebels were beaten and defeated upon many occasions.

Alexander, having taken a city wherein many of them had shut themselves up, carried eight hundred of them to Jerusalem, and caused them all to be crucified in one day: When they were fixed to the cross, he ordered their wives and children to be brought out, and to have their throats cut before their faces. During this cruel execution, the king regaled his wives and concubines in a place from whence they saw all that passed; and this sight was to him and them the principal part of the entertainment. Horrid gratification! This civil war, during the six years that it lasted, had cost the lives of more than fifty thousand men on the side of the rebels.

Alexander, after having put an end to it, undertook many other foreign expeditions with very great success. Upon his return to Jerusalem, he abandoned himself to intemperance and excess of wine; that brought a quartan ague upon him, of which he died at three years end, after having reigned twenty-seven.

He left two sons, Hyrcanus and Aristobulus; but he decreed by his will, that Alexandra his wife should govern the kingdom during her life, and chuse which of her sons she thought fit to succeed her.

Sect. III. Reign of Alexandra, the wife of Alexander Jannæus, which continued nine years. Hyrcanus her eldest son is high-priest during that time.

According to the advice of her husband, (a) Alexandra submitted herself and her children to the power of the Pharisees, declaring to them, that in doing so she only conformed to the last will of her husband.

By this step she gained so much upon them, that forgetting their hatred for the dead, though they carried it during his life as far as possible, they changed it on a sudden into a respect and veneration for his memory, and instead of the invectives and reproaches they had always abundantly vented against him, nothing was heard but praises and panegyrics, wherein they exalted immoderately the great actions of Alexander, by which the nation had been aggrandized, and its power, honour and credit, much augmented. By this means they brought over the people so effectually, whom till then they had always irritated against him, that they celebrated his funeral with greater pomp and magnificence, than that of any of his predeceivers; and Alexandra, according to the intent of his will, was confirmed sovereign administratrix of the nation. We see from hence, that a blind and unlimited conformity to the power and will of the Pharisees, stood with them for every kind of merit, and made all failings, and even crimes, disappear as effectually as if they had never been; which is very common with those who are fond of ruling.

When that princess saw herself well established, she caused her eldest son Hyrcanus to be received as high-priest: He was then near thirty years of age. According to her promise, she gave the administration of all important affairs to the Pharisees. The first thing they did was to repeal the decree, by which John Hyrcanus, father of the two last kings, had abolished all their traditional constitutions, which were afterwards more generally received than ever. They persecuted with great cruelty, all those who had declared themselves their enemies in the preceding reigns, without the queen's being able to prevent them; because she had tied up her own hands, by putting herself into those of the Pharisees. She had seen in her husband's time what a civil war was, and the infinite misfortunes with which it is attended. She was afraid of kindling a new one, and not knowing any other means to prevent it, than to give way to the the violence of those revengeful and inexorable men, she believed it necessary to suffer a less, by way of precaution against a greater evil. What we have said upon this head may contribute very much to our having a right sense of the state of the Jewish nation, and of the characters of those who governed it.

The Pharisees always continued (b) their persecutions against those who had opposed them under the late king. They made them accountable for all the cruelties and faults with which they thought proper to blacken his memory. They had already got rid of many of their enemies, and invented every day new articles of accusation to destroy those who gave them most umbrage amongst such as still survived.

The friends and partisans of the late king, seeing no end to these persecutions, and that their destruction was sworn, assembled at last, and came in a body to wait on the queen, with Aristobulus, her second son, at their head. They represented to her the services they had done the late king; their fidelity and attachment to him in all his wars, and in all the difficulties with which he had been involved during the troubles. That it was very hard at present, under her government, that every thing they had done for him should be made criminal, and to see themselves sacrificed to the implacable hatred of their enemies, solely for their adherence to herself and her family. They implored her either to put a stop to such sort of enquiries, or if that was not in her power, to permit them to retire out of the country, in order to their seeking an asylum elsewhere: At least they begged her to put them into garrisoned places, where they might find some security against the violence of their enemies.

The queen was as much affected as it was possible to be with the condition she saw them in, and the injustice done them. But it was out of her power to do for them all she desired; for she had given herself masters, masters, by engaging to act in nothing without the consent of the Pharisees. How dangerous is it to invest such people with too much authority! They exclaimed, that it would be putting a stop to the course of justice, to suspend the enquiries after the culpable; that such a proceeding was what no government ought to suffer, and that therefore they never would come into it. On the other side, the queen believed, that she ought not to give her consent, that the real and faithful friends of her family should abandon their country in such a manner; because she would then lie at the mercy of a turbulent faction without any support, and would have no resource in case of necessity. She resolved therefore upon the third point they had proposed to her, and dispersed them into the places where she had garrisons. She found two advantages in that conduct; the first was, that their enemies dared not attack them in those fortresses, where they would have their arms in their hands; and the second, that they would always be a body of reserve, upon which she could rely upon occasion in case of any rupture.

Some years after, queen Alexandra fell sick of a very dangerous distemper, which brought her to the point of death. As soon as Aristobulus, her youngest son, saw that she could not recover, as he had long formed the design of seizing the crown at her death, he stole out of Jerusalem in the night, with only one domestick, and went to the places, in which, according to a plan he had given them, the friends of his father had been placed in garrisons. He was received in them with open arms, and in fifteen days time twenty-two of those towns and castles declared for him, which put him in possession of almost all the forces of the state. The people, as well as the army, were entirely inclined to declare for him, weary of the cruel administration of the Pharisees, who had governed without control under Alexandra, and were become insupportable to all the world. They came therefore in crowds from all sides to follow the standards

A. M. 3934.
Ant. J. C. 70.
standards of Aristobulus; in hopes that he would abolish the tyranny of the Pharisees, which could not be expected from Hyrcanus his brother, who had been brought up by his mother in a blind submission to that sect: Besides which, he had neither the courage nor capacity necessary to so vigorous a design; for he was heavy and indolent, void of activity and application, and of a very mean genius.

When the Pharisees saw that Aristobulus’s party augmented considerably, they went with Hyrcanus at their head to represent to the dying queen what had passed, and to demand her orders and assistance. She answered, that she was no longer in a condition to intermeddle in such affairs, and that she left the care of them to the Pharisees. However, she appointed Hyrcanus her heir general, and expired soon after.

As soon as she was dead, he took possession of the throne, and the Pharisees used all their endeavours to support him upon it. When Aristobulus quitted Jerusalem, they caused his wife and children, whom he had left behind him, to be shut up in the castle of Baris, as hostages against himself. But seeing this did not stop him, they raised an army. Aristobulus did the same. A battle near Jericho decided the quarrel. Hyrcanus, abandoned by most part of his troops, who went over to his brother, was obliged to fly to Jerusalem, and to shut himself up in the castle of Baris: His partisans took refuge in the temple. Some time after they also submitted to Aristobulus, and Hyrcanus was obliged to come to an accommodation with him.

Sect. IV. Reign of Aristobulus II. which continued six years.

It was agreed by the accommodation (a), that Aristobulus should have the crown and high-priesthood, and that Hyrcanus should resign both to him,

* Baris was a castle situate upon an high rock without the works of the temple, which were upon the same rock.
him, and content himself with a private life, under the protection of his brother, and with the enjoyment of his fortunes. It was not difficult to reconcile him to this; for he loved quiet and ease above all things, and quitted the government, after having possessed it three months. The tyranny of the Pharisees ended with his reign, after having greatly distressed the Jewish nation from the death of Alexander Jannæus.

The troubles of the state were not so soon appeased, to which the ambition of Antipas, better known under the name of Antipater, father of Herod, gave birth. He was by extraction an Idumæan, and a Jew by religion, as were all the Idumæans, from the time Hyrcanus had obliged them to embrace Judaism. As he had been brought up in the court of Alexander Jannæus, and of Alexandra his wife, who reigned after him, he had gained the ascendant of Hyrcanus their eldest son, with the hope of raising himself by his favour, when he should succeed to the crown (b). But when he saw all his measures broke by the deposition of Hyrcanus, and the coronation of Aristobulus, from whom he had nothing to expect, he employed his whole address and application to replace Hyrcanus upon the throne.

The latter, by his secret negotiations, had at first applied to Aretas, king of Arabia Patrea, for aid to reinstate himself. After various events, which I pass over to avoid prolixity, he had recourse to Pompey, who, on his return from his expedition against Mithridates, was arrived in Syria (c). He there took cognizance of the competition between Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, who repaired thither according to his orders. A great number of Jews went thither also, to demand that they should be freed from the government of both the one and the other. They represented, that they ought not to be ruled by kings: That they had long been accustomed to obey only the high-priest, who, without any other title, administered

(b) Id. xiv. 5.
(c) Id. de bel. Jud. 1--5.
Alexander's Successors.

Aftered justice according to the laws and constitutions transmitted down to them from their forefathers: That the two brothers were indeed of the sacerdotal line; but that they had changed the form of the government for a new one, which would enslave them if not remedied.

Hyrcanus complained, that Aristobulus had unjustly deprived him of his birth-right, by usurping everything, and leaving him only a small estate for his subsistence. He accused him also of practising piracy at sea, and of plundering his neighbours by land. And to confirm what he alleged against him, he produced almost a thousand Jews, the principals of the nation, whom Antipater had brought expressly, to support by their testimony what that prince had to say against his brother.

Aristobulus replied to this, That Hyrcanus had been deposed only for his incapacity; that his sloth and indolence rendered him entirely incapable of the publick affairs; that the people despised him; and that he, Aristobulus, had been obliged to take the reins of the government into his own hands, to prevent them from falling into those of strangers. In fine, that he bore no other title than his father Alexander had done before him. And in proof of what he advanced, he produced a great number of the young nobility of the country, who appeared with all possible splendor and magnificence. Their superb habits, haughty manners, and proud demeanor, did no great service to his cause.

Pompey heard enough to discern, that the conduct of Aristobulus was violent and unjust, but would not however pronounce immediately upon it, left Aristobulus, out of resentment, should oppose his designs against Arabia, which he had much at heart; he therefore dismissed the two brothers respectfully, and told them, that at his return from reducing Aretas and his Arabians, he should pass through Judæa, and that he would then regulate their affair, and make the necessary dispositions in all things.
Aristobulus, who fully penetrated Pompey's sentiments, set out suddenly from Damascus, without paying him the least instance of respect, returned into Judæa, armed his subjects, and prepared for a good defence. By this conduct, he made Pompey his mortal enemy.

Pompey applied himself also in making preparations for the Arabian war. Aretas, till then, had despised the Roman arms; but when he saw them at his door, and that victorious army ready to enter his dominions, he sent an embassy to make his submissions. Pompey, however, advanced as far as Petra his capital, which he took. Aretas was taken in it. Pompey at first kept him under a guard, but at length he was released upon accepting the conditions imposed on him by the victor, who soon after returned to Damascus.

He was not apprized till then of Aristobulus's proceedings in Judæa. He marched thither with his army, and found Aristobulus posted in the castle of Alexandrion, which stood upon a high mountain at the entrance of the country. The place was extremely strong, built by his father Alexander, who had given his name to it. Pompey sent to bid him come down to him. Aristobulus was not much inclined to comply, but he at last gave into the opinion of those about him, who apprehending a war with the Romans, advised him to go. He did so, and after a conversation which turned upon his difference with his brother, he returned into his castle. He repeated the same two or three times, in hopes by that complacency to gain upon Pompey, and induce him to decide in his favour. But for fear of accident, he did not omit to put good garrisons into his strong places, and to make all other preparations for a vigorous defence, in case Pompey should decree against him. Pompey, who had advice of his proceedings, the last time he came to him, obliged him to put them all into his hands, by way of sequestration, and made him sign orders for that purpose to all the commanders of those places.
Alexander's Successors.

Aristobulus, incensed at the violence which had been done him, as soon as he was released, made all haste to Jerusalem, and prepared every thing for the war. His resolutions to keep the crown, made him the sport of the different passions, hope and fear. When he saw the least appearance that Pompey would decide in his favour, he made use of all the arts of complacency to incline him to it. When, on the contrary, he had the least reason to suspect, that he would declare against him, he observed a directly opposite conduct. Such was the contrariety visible in the different steps he took throughout this affair.

Pompey followed him close. The first place where he encamped in his way to Jerusalem, was Jericho; there he received the news of Mithridates's death, as we shall see in the following book.

He continued his march towards Jerusalem. When he approached, Aristobulus, who began to repent of what he had done, came out to meet him, and endeavoured to bring him to an accommodation, by promising an entire submission, and a great sum of money to prevent the war. Pompey accepted his offers, and sent Gabinius, at the head of a detachment, to receive the money; but when that lieutenant-general arrived at Jerusalem, he found the gates shut against him, and, instead of receiving the money, he was told from the top of the walls, that the city would not stand to the agreement. Pompey thereupon, not being willing that they should deceive him with impunity, ordered Aristobulus, whom he had kept with him, to be put in irons, and advanced with his whole army against Jerusalem. The city was extremely strong by its situation, and the works which had been made; and had it not been divided within doors against itself, was capable of making a long defence.

Aristobulus's party was for defending the place; especially when they saw that Pompey kept their king prisoner. But the adherents of Hyrcanus were determined to open the gates to that general. And as the latter were much the greater number, the other party party retired to the mountain where the temple stood, to defend it, and caused the bridges of the ditch and valley, which surrounded it, to be broke down. Pompey, to whom the city immediately opened its gates, resolved to besiege the temple. The place held out three months entire, and would have done so three more, and perhaps obliged the Romans to abandon their enterprize, but for the superstitious rigour with which the besieged observed the sabbath. They believed, indeed, that they might defend themselves when attacked, but not that they might prevent the works of the enemy, or make any for themselves. The Romans knew how to take the advantage of this inaction upon the sabbath-days. They did not attack the Jews upon them, but filled up the fosses, made their approaches, and fixed their engines without opposition. They threw down at length a great tower, with which so great a part of the wall fell, that the breach was large enough for an assault. The place was carried sword in hand, and a terrible slaughter ensued, in which more than twelve persons were killed.

During the whole tumult, cries, and disorder of this slaughter, history observes that the priests, who were at that time employed in divine service, continued it with a surprizing unconcern, notwithstanding the rage of their enemies, and their grief to see their friends and relations massacred before their eyes. Many of them saw their own blood mingle with that of the sacrifices they offered, and the sword of the enemy make themselves the victims of their duty: Happy, and worthy of being envied, if they were as faithful to the spirit, as the letter of it!

Pompey, with many of his superior officers, entered the temple, and not only into the sanctuary, but into the Sanctum Sanctorum, into which, by the law, only the high-priest was permitted to enter once a year, upon the solemn day of expiation. This was what afflicted and enraged the Jews most against the Romans.
ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS.

Pompey did not touch the treasures of the temple, that consisted principally in sums which had been deposited there by private families for their better security. Those sums amounted to two thousand talents in specie, without reckoning the gold and silver vessels, which were innumerable, and of infinite value. † It was not, says Cicero, out of respect for the majesty of the God adored in that temple, that Pompey behaved in this manner; for, according to him, nothing was more contemptible than the Jewish religion, more unworthy the wisdom and grandeur of the Romans, nor more opposite to the institutions of their ancestors. Pompey in this noble disinterestedness had no other motive, than to deprive malice and calumny of all means of attacking his reputation. Such were the thoughts of the most learned of the Pagans upon the only religion of the true God. They blasphemed what they knew nothing of.

It hath been observed, that till then Pompey had been successful in all things, but that after this sacrilegious curiosity, his good-fortune abandoned him, and that his taking the temple of Jerusalem was his last victory.

Sect. V. Reign of Hyrcanus II. which continued twenty-four years.

POMPEY having put an end to the war, caused the walls of Jerusalem to be demolished, re-established Hyrcanus, and sent Aristobulus, with his two sons, Alexander and Antigonus, prisoners to Rome. He dismembered several cities from the kingdom of Judæa, which he united with the government of Syria, imposed a tribute upon Hyrcanus, and left the administration of affairs to Antipater, who was at the court.

* Three hundred thousand pounds sterling.
court of Hyrcanus, and one of his principal ministers. Alexander made his escape upon the way to Rome, and returned into Judæa, where he afterwards excited new troubles.

A. M. 3947. Hyrcanus finding himself too weak to take the field against him, had recourse to the arms of the Romans. Gabinius, governor of Syria, after having overthrown Alexander in a battle, went to Jerusalem, and re-instated Hyrcanus in the high-priesthood (a). He made great alterations in the civil government, for from monarchical, as it had been, he changed it into aristocratical; but those innovations were but of short duration.

A. M. 3957. Cæsar upon his march against the Parthians, always intent upon gratifying his insatiable avarice, slopt at Jerusalem, where he had been told great treasures were laid up. He plundered the temple of all the riches in it, which amounted to the sum of ten thousand talents, that is to say, about fifteen hundred thousand pounds sterling.

A. M. 3957. Cæsar (b), after his expedition into Egypt, being arrived in Syria, Antigonus, who had made his escape from Rome with his father Aristobulus, came to throw himself at his feet, begged him to re-establish him upon the throne of his father, who was lately dead, and made great complaints against Antipater and Hyrcanus. Cæsar had too great obligations to both, to do any thing contrary to their interests; for, as we shall see in the sequel, without the aid he had received from them, his expedition into Egypt would have miscarried. He decreed that Hyrcanus should retain the dignity of high-priest of Jerusalem, and the sovereignty of Judæa, to himself and his posterity after him for ever, and gave Antipater the office of procurator of Judæa under Hyrcanus. By this decree, the aristocracy of Gabinius was abolished, and the government of Judæa re-established upon the ancient foot.

ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS.

Antipater caused the (c) government of Jerusalem to be given to Phasael his eldest son, and that of Galilee to Herod his second son.

Caesar (d), at Hyrcanus's request, and in consideration of the services he had rendered him in Egypt and Syria, permitted him to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, which Pompey had caused to be demolished. Antipater, without losing time, began the work, and the city was soon fortified as it had been before the demolition. Caesar was killed this year.

During the civil wars, Judaea, as well as all the other provinces of the Roman empire, was agitated by violent troubles.

Pacorus, (e) son of Orodes king of Parthia, had entered Syria with a powerful army. From thence he sent a detachment into Judaea, with orders to place Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, upon the throne, who on his side had also raised troops. Hyrcanus, and Phasael, Herod's brother, upon the proposal of an accommodation, had the imprudence to go to the enemy, who seized them, and put them in irons. Herod escaped from Jerusalem the moment before the Parthians entered it to seize him also.

Having missed Herod, they plundered the city and country, placed Antigonus upon the throne, and delivered Hyrcanus and Phasael in chains into his hands. Phasael, who well knew that his death was resolved, dashed out his brains against the wall, to avoid the hands of the executioner. As for Hyrcanus, his life was granted him; but to render him incapable of the priesthood, Antigonus caused his ears to be cut off: For according to the Levitical law (f), it was requisite that the high-priest should be perfect in all his members. After having thus mutilated him, he gave him back to the Parthians, that they might carry him into the East, from whence it would not be possible for him to embroil affairs in Judaea. (g) He continued a prisoner.

ner at Seleucia in Babylonia, till the coming of Phraates to the crown, who caused his chains to be taken off, and gave him entire liberty to see and converse with the Jews of that country, who were very numerous. They looked upon him as their king and high-priest, and raised him a revenue sufficient to support his rank with splendor. The love of his native country made him forget all those advantages. He returned the year following to Jerusalem, whither Herod had invited him to come, but put him to death some years afterwards.

Herod at first took refuge in Egypt, from whence he went to Rome. Anthony was then in the high degree of power, which the triumvirate had given him.
He took Herod under his protection, and even did more in his favour than he expected. For instead of what he proposed, which was at most to obtain the crown for * Aristobulus, whose sister Mariamne he had lately married, with the view only of governing under him, as Antipater had done under Hyrcanus; Anthony caused the crown to be conferred upon him-selves, contrary to the usual maxim of the Romans in like cases. For it was not their custom to violate the rights of the royal houses, which acknowledged them for protectors, and to give crowns to strangers. Herod was declared king of Judæa by the senate, and conducted by the consuls to the Capitol, where he received the investiture of the crown, with the ceremonies usual upon such occasions.

Herod passed only seven days at Rome in negotiating this great affair, and returned speedily into Judæa.
He employed no more time than three months in his journeys by sea and land.

* Aristobulus was the son of Alex-andrea, Hyrcanus's daughter; and that the right of both brothers to the his father was Alexander, son of crown was united in his person.
It was not easy for Herod to establish himself in the possession of the kingdom of Judæa, as it had been to obtain his title from the Romans. Antigonus was not at all inclined to resign a throne, which had cost him so much pains and money to acquire. He disputed it with him very vigorously for almost two years.

Herod, (a) who during the winter had made great preparations for the following campaign, opened it at length with the siege of Jerusalem, which he invested at the head of a fine and numerous army. Anthony had given orders to Sosius, governor of Syria, to use his utmost endeavours to reduce Antigonus, and to put Herod into full possession of the kingdom of Judæa.

Whilst the works necessary to the siege were carrying on, Herod made a tour to Samaria, and at length consummated his marriage with Mariamne. They had been contracted four years to each other: But the unforeseen troubles, into which he fell, had prevented their consummating the marriage till then. She was the daughter of Alexander, the son of king Aristobulus, and Alexandra, the daughter of Hyrcanus the second, and thereby grand-daughter to those two brothers. She was a princess of extraordinary beauty and virtue, and possessed in an eminent degree all the other qualities that adorn the sex. The attachment of the Jews to the Asmonæan family, made Herod imagine, that by espousing her, he should find no difficulty in gaining their affection, which was one of his reasons for consummating his marriage at that time.

On his return to Jerusalem, Sosius and he, having joined their forces, pressed the siege in concert with the utmost vigour, and with a very numerous army, which amounted to at least sixty thousand men. The place however held out against them many months with exceeding resolution, and if the besieged had been as expert expert in the art of war and the defence of places, as they were brave and resolute, it would not perhaps have been taken. But the Romans, who were much better skilled in those things than them, carried the place at length, after a siege of something more than six months.

(a) Joseph. Antiq. xiv. 27. Id. de bell. Jud. 1. 15.

The Jews being driven from their posts, the enemy entered on all sides, and made themselves masters of the city. And to revenge the obstinate resistance they had made, and the pains they had suffered during so long and difficult a siege, they filled all quarters of Jerusalem with blood and slaughter, plundered and destroyed all before them, though Herod did his utmost to prevent both the one and the other.

Antigonus seeing all lost, came and threw himself at the feet of Sosius in the most submissive and most abject manner. He was put in chains, and sent to Anthony, as soon as he arrived at Antioch. He designed at first to have reserved him for triumph; but Herod, who did not think himself safe as long as that branch of the royal family survived, would not let him rest till he had obtained the death of that unfortunate prince, for which he even gave a large sum of money (b). He was proceeded against in form, condemned to die, and had the sentence executed upon him in the same manner as common criminals, with the rods and axes of the stator, and was fastened to a stake; a treatment with which the Romans had never used any crowned head before.

Thus ended the reign of the Asmonæans, after a duration of an hundred and twenty-nine years, from the beginning of the government of Judas Maccabæus, Herod entered by this means upon the peaceable possession of the kingdom of Judea.

This singular, extraordinary, and, till then, unexampled event, by which the sovereign authority over the Jews was given to a stranger, an Idumæan, ought to have opened their eyes, and rendered them attentive to

to a celebrated prophecy, which had foretold it in clear terms; had given it as the certain mark of another event, in which the whole nation was interested, which was the perpetual object of their vows and hopes, and distinguished them by a peculiar characteristick from all the other nations of the world, that had an equal interest in it, but without knowing or being apprized of it. This was the prophecy of Jacob, who at his death foretold to his twelve sons, assembled round his bed, what would happen in the series of time to the twelve tribes, of which they were the chiefs, and after whom they were called. Amongst the other predictions of that patriarch concerning the tribe of Judah, there is this of which we now speak: The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be. The scepter or rod (for the Hebrew signifies both) implies here the authority and superiority over the other tribes.

All the ancient Jews have explained this prediction to denote the Messiah; the fact is therefore incontestable, and is reduced to two essential points. The first is, that as long as the tribe of Judah shall subsist, it shall have pre-eminence and authority over the other tribes: The second, that it shall subsist, and form a body of a republick, governed by its laws and magistrates, till the Messiah comes.

The first point is verified in the series of the history of the Israelites, wherein that pre-eminence of the tribe of Judah appears evidently. This is not the proper place for proofs of this kind; those who would be more fully informed, may consult the explanation of Genesis lately published *.

For the second point, we have only to consider it with the least attention. When Herod the Idumæan, and in consequence a stranger, was placed upon the throne, the authority and superiority, which the tribe of Judah had over the other tribes, were first taken from

*(c) Gen. xlix. 10.
* By F. Babuty Rue St. Jaques.
from it. The tribe of Judah had no longer the supremacy, it was no longer a body subsisting, from which the magistrates were taken. It was manifest, therefore, that the Messiah was come. But at what time did that tribe become like the rest, and was confounded with them? In the time of Titus Vespasian, and Adrian, who finally exterminated the remains of Judah. It was therefore before those times the Messiah came.

How wonderful does God appear in the accomplishment of his prophecies! Would it be making a right use of history, not to dwell a few moments upon facts like this, when we meet them in the course of our matter? Herod, reduced to quit Jerusalem, takes refuge at Rome. He has no thoughts of demanding the sovereignty for himself, but for another. It was the grossest injustice to give it to a stranger, whilst there were princes of the royal family in being. But it had been decreed from all eternity, that Herod should be king of the Jews. Heaven and earth should sooner pass away, than that decree of God not be fulfilled. Anthony was at Rome, and in possession of sovereign power, when Herod arrives there. How many events were necessary to the conducting of things to this point! But is there any thing difficult to the Almighty?

ARTICLE II.

Abridgment of the history of the Parthians, from the establishment of that empire to the defeat of Crassus, which is related at large.

The Parthian empire was one of the most powerful and most considerable that ever was in the East. Very weak in its beginnings, as is common, it extended itself by little and little over all Asia major, and made even the Romans tremble. Its duration is generally allowed to be four hundred threescore and fourteen years; of which two hundred and fifty-four years were before Jesus Christ, and two hundred and twenty after him. Arsaces was the founder of that empire, empire, from whom all his successors were called Arfacides. Artaxerxes, by birth a Persian, having overcome and slain Artabanus, the last of those kings, transferred the empire of the Parthians to the Persians, in the fifth year of the emperor Alexander, the son of Mammæus. I shall only speak here of the affairs of the Parthians before Jesus Christ, and shall treat them very briefly, except the defeat of Crassus, which I shall relate in all its extent.
ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS. 25

I have observed elsewhere what gave (a) Arfaces I. occasion to make Parthia revolt, and to expel the Macedonians, who had been in possession of it from the death of Alexander the Great, and in what manner he had caused himself to be elected king of the Parthians. Theodotus at the same time made Bactria revolt, and took that province from Antiochus, surnamed Theos.

Some time after Seleucus Callinicus (b), who succeeded Antiochus, endeavoured in vain to subdue the Parthians. He fell into their hands himself, and was made prisoner: This happened in the reign of Tiridates, called otherwise Arfaces II. brother of the first.

Antiochus, surnamed the Great (c), was more successful than his predecessor. He marched into the East, and repassed himself of Media, which the Parthians had taken from him. He also entered Parthia, and obliged the king to retire into Hyrcania, from whence he returned soon after with an army of an hundred thousand foot, and twenty thousand horse. As the war was of a tedious duration, Antiochus made a treaty with Arfaces, by which he left him Parthia and Hyrcania, upon condition that he should assist him in reconquering the revolted provinces. Antiochus marched afterwards against Euthydemus king of Bactria, with whom he was also obliged to come to an accommodation.

Priapatius, the son of Arfaces II. succeeded his father,

(a) Vol. V.  (b) Vol. V.  (c) Vol. V.

* The Abbe Longuesue, in his Latin Dissertation upon the Arfacides, describes what is here said to Artabanus, whom he places between Arfacides II. and Priapatius. Justin says nothing of them.

father, and after having reigned fifteen years, left the crown at his death to Phraates I. his eldest son.

Phraates left it to Mithridates, whom he preferred before his own issue, upon account of his extraordinary merit, and who was in effect one of the greatest kings the Parthians ever had. He carried his arms farther than Alexander the Great. It was he who made Demetrius Nicator prisoner.

(d) Phraates II. succeeded Mithridates his father. Antiochus Sidetes, king of Syria, marched against him at the head of a powerful army, under pretext of delivering his brother Demetrius, who had been long kept in captivity. After having defeated Phraates in three battles, he was himself overthrown, and killed in the last, and his army entirely cut to pieces. Phraates, in his turn, at the time he had formed the design of invading Syria, was attacked by the Scythians, and lost his life in a battle.

Artabanus his uncle reigned in his stead, and died soon after.

His successor was Mithridates II. of whom Justin says (e), that his great actions acquired him the surname of Great.

He declared war against the Armenians, and by a treaty of peace, which he made with them, he obliged their king to send him his son Tigranes as an hostage. The latter was afterwards set upon the throne of Armenia by the Parthians themselves, and joined with Mithridates, king of Pontus, in the war against the Romans.

Antiochus Eusebes took refuge with Mithridates, who re-established him in the possession of part of the kingdom of Syria two years after.

It was the same Mithridates, as we shall see hereafter, who sent Orobarzus to Sylla, to demand the amity and alliance of the Romans, and who caused him to be put to death on his return, for having given place to Sylla.

Demetrius Eucerus (f), who reigned at Damascus, besieging besieging Philip his brother in the city of Bærea, was defeated and taken by the Parthian troops sent to the aid of Philip, and carried prisoner to Mithridates, who treated him with all the honours possible. He died there of disease.

Mithridates II. died (g), after having reigned forty years, generally regretted by his subjects. The domestick troubles, with which his death was followed, considerably weakened the Parthian empire, and made his loss still more sensible. Tigranes re-entered upon all the provinces he had given up to the Parthians, and took several others from them. He passed the Euphrates, and made himself master of Syria and Phoenicia.

During these troubles, the Parthians elected Mnasekires, and after him Sinatrocces, kings, of whom almost nothing more is known than their names.

Phraates, the son of the latter, was he, who caused himself to be surnamed the god.

He sent ambassadours to Lucullus, after the great victory the Romans had obtained over Tigranes. He held at the same time secret intelligence with the latter. It was at that time Mithridates wrote him the letter, which Sallust has preserved.

Pompey having been appointed, in the place of Lucullus, to terminate the war against Mithridates, engaged Phraates in the party of the Romans.

The latter joins Tigranes the younger against his father, and breaks with Pompey.

After Pompey's return to Rome, Phraates is killed by his own children. Mithridates his eldest son takes his place.

Tigranes, king of Armenia, dies almost at the same time. Arravazdes his son succeeds him.

Mithridates (b), expelled his kingdom either by his own subjects, to whom he had rendered himself odious, or by the ambition of his brother Orodes, applies to Gabinius, who commanded in Syria, to re-establish establish him, upon the throne; but without effect. He takes up arms in his own defence. Besieged in Babylon, and warmly pressed, he surrenders to Orodes, who considering him only as an enemy, and not a brother, causes him to be put to death; by which means Orodes becomes peaceable possessor of the throne.

(g) Strab. I. xi. p. 532. Plut. in Lucul. p. 500, &c. (b) Justin. l. xiii. c. 4.

But he found enough to employ him abroad (i), that he had no reason to expect. Crassus had lately been created consul at Rome, with Pompey for the second time. On the partition of the provinces, Syria fell to Crassus, who was exceedingly rejoiced upon that account; because it favoured the design he had formed of carrying the war into Parthia. When he was in company, even with people he scarce knew, he could not moderate his transports. Amongst his friends, with whom he was under less restraint, he ran even into rhodomontades unworthy of his age and character, and seemed to forget himself in a strange manner. He did not confine his views to the government of Syria, nor to the conquest of some neighbouring provinces, nor even to that of Parthia: He flattered himself with doing such things, as should make the great exploits of Lucullus against Tigranes, and those of Pompey against Mithridates, appear like the seats of infants in comparison with his. He had already over-ran in thought Bactria and the Indias, and penetrated as far as the remotest seas, and the extremities of the East. However, in the instructions and powers which were given him, Parthia was in no manner included: But all the world knew his design against it was his darling passion. Such a beginning forebodes no success.

His departure had besides something more inauspicious in it. One of the tribunes, named Ateius, threatened to oppose his going; and was joined by many people, who could not suffer him to set out with gaiety of heart, to carry a war against a people who had done the Romans no injury, and were their friends and allies. That tribune, in consequence, having in vain opposed the

(i) Plut. in Crafl. p. 552, 554.
ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS.

the departure of Crassus, made haste to the gate of the city through which he was to pass, and set a cauldron full of fire before him. When Crassus came to the place, he threw perfumes, and poured libations into the pan, uttering over them the most terrible imprecations, which could not be heard without making all present tremble with horror, and of which the misfortunes of Crassus have been regarded by many writers as the accomplishment.

Nothing could stop him. Superior to all opposition, he continued his march, arrived at Brundisium, and though the sea was very tempestuous, embarked, and lost abundance of ships in his passage. When he arrived at Galatia, he had an interview with king Deiotarus, who, though of a very advanced age, was at that time employed in building a new city. Upon which Crassus rallied him to this effect, King of the Galatians, you begin full late to build a city at the twelfth hour of the day. And you, Lord Crassus, replied Deiotarus, are not too early in setting out to make war against the Parthians. For Crassus was at that time upwards of sixty years old, and his countenance made him still look older than he was.

He had been informed, (k) that there were considerable treasures in the temple of Jerusalem, which Pompey had not ventured to touch. He believed it worth his trouble to go a little out of his way to make himself master of them. He therefore marched thither with his army. Besides the other riches, which amounted to very considerable sums, in it there was a beam of gold, inclosed and concealed in another of wood made hollow for that use: This was known only by Eleazar the priest, who kept the treasuries of the sanctuary. This beam of gold weighed three hundred minae, each of which weighed two pounds and a half. Eleazar, who was apprized of the motive of Crassus's march to Jerusalem, to save the other riches, which were almost all of them deposited in the temple by by private persons, discovered the golden beam to Craffus, and suffered him to take it away, after having made him take an oath not to meddle with the rest. Was he so ignorant to imagine any thing sacred with avarice? Craffus took the beam of gold, and notwithstanding made the rest of the treasures his plunder, which amounted to about fifteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. He then continued his rout.

The twelfth hour was the end of the day.

Every thing succeeded at first as happily as he could have expected. He built a bridge over the Euphrates without any opposition, passed it with his army, and entered the Parthian territories. He invaded them without any other real motive for the war, than the insatiable desire of enriching himself by the plunder of a country which was supposed to be extremely opulent. The Romans under Sylla, and afterwards under Pompey, had made peace and several treaties with them. There had been no complaint of any infraction or enterprize to give a just pretext for a war. So that the Parthians expected nothing less than such an invasion, and not being upon their guard, had made no preparations for their defence. Craffus in consequence was master of the field, and over-ran without opposition the greatest part of Mesopotamia. He took also several cities with no resistance, and had he known how to take advantage of the occasion, it had been easy for him to have penetrated as far as Seleucia and Ctesiphon, to have seized them, and made himself master of all Babylonia, as he had done of Mesopotamia. But instead of pursuing his point, in the beginning of autumn, after having left seven thousand foot and a thousand horse to secure the cities which had surrendered to him, he repassed the Euphrates, and puts his troops into winter-quarters in the cities of Syria, where his sole employment was to amass money, and to plunder temples.

He was joined there by his son, whom Cæsar sent to him out of Gaul, a young man who had already been honoured with several of the military crowns, given by the general to such as distinguished themselves by their valour.
ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS.

valour. He brought with him a thousand chosen horse.

Of all the faults committed by Crassus in this expedition, which were very considerable, the greatest undoubtedly, after that of having undertaken this war, was his hasty return into Syria. For he ought to have gone on without staying, and to have seized Babylon and Seleucia, cities always at enmity with the Parthians, instead of giving his enemies time to make preparations by his retreat, which was the cause of his ruin.

Whilst he was re-assembling all his troops from their winter-quarters, ambassadors from the king of Parthia arrived, who opened their commissions in few words. They told him, that if that army was sent by the Romans against the Parthians, the war could not be terminated by any treaty of peace, and could only be brought to a conclusion by the final ruin of the one or the other empire. That if, as they had been informed, it was only Crassus, who, against the opinion of his country, and to satiate his private avarice, had taken arms against them, and entered one of their provinces, the king their master was well disposed to act with moderation in the affair, to take pity of the age of Crassus, and to suffer the Romans in his dominions, rather shut up than keeping possession of cities, to depart with their lives and rings safe. They spoke no doubt of the garrisons left by Crassus in the conquered places. Crassus answered this discourse only with a rhodomontade. He told them, They should have his answer in the city of Seleucia. Upon which the most ancient of the ambassadors, named Vahifes, made answer, laughing, and shewing him the palm of his hand; Crassus, you will sooner see hair grow in the palm of my hand, than Seleucia. The ambassadors retired, and went to give their king notice, that he must prepare for war.

As soon as the season would permit (l), Crassus took the field. The Parthians had time, during the winter, to assemble a very great army, to make head against him.

(l) Plut. in Crass. p. 354.
THE HISTORY OF

him. Orodes their king divided his troops, and marched in person with one part of them to the frontiers of Armenia: He sent the other into Mesopotamia, under the command of Surena. That general, upon his arrival there, retook several of the places Crassus had made himself master of the year before.

About the same time some Roman soldiers, who with exceeding difficulty had escaped out of the cities of Mesopotamia, where they had been in garrison, of which the Parthians had already retaken some, and were besieging the rest, came to Crassus, and related things to him highly capable of disquieting and alarming him. They told him, that they had seen with their own eyes the incredible numbers of the enemy, and that they had also been witnesses of their terrible valour in the bloody attacks of the cities they besieged. They added, that they were troops not to be escaped when they pursued, nor overtaken when they fled; that their arrows, of a weight, and at the same time of an astonishing rapidity, were always attended with mortal wounds, against which it was impossible to defend.

This discourse infinitely abated the courage and boldness of the Roman soldiers; who imagined, that the Parthians differed in nothing from the Armenians and Cappadocians, that Lucullus had so easily overthrown; and flattered themselves, that the whole difficulty of the war would consist in the length of the way, and the pursuit of the enemy, who would never dare to come to blows with them. They now saw, contrary to their expectation, that they were to experience great battles and great dangers. This discouragement rose so high, that many of the principal officers were of opinion, that it was necessary for Crassus, before he advanced farther, to assemble a council, in order to deliberate again upon the whole enterprise. But Crassus listened to no other advice, but of those who pressed him to begin his march, and to make all possible expedition.

What encouraged him the most, and confirmed him in that resolution, was the arrival of Artabatus, king of of Armenia. He brought with him a body of six thousand horse, which were part of his guards; adding, that besides these, he had ten thousand cuirassiers, and thirty thousand foot at his service. But he advised him to take great care not to march his army into the plains of Mesopotamia, and told him, that he must enter the enemy's country by the way of Armenia; the reasons with which he supported this advice, were, that Armenia, being a mountainous country, the Parthian horse, in which the greatest strength of their army consisted, would be rendered entirely useless to them: That if they took this rout, he should be in a condition to supply the army with all necessaries; instead of which, if he marched by the way of Mesopotamia, convoys would be deficient, and he would have a powerful army in his front, on all the marches it would be necessary for him to take, before he could penetrate to the center of the enemy's dominions; that in those plains, the horse would have all possible advantages against him; and, lastly, that he must cross several sandy deserts, where the troops might be in great distress for want of water and provisions. The counsel was excellent, and the reasons unanswerable: But Crassus, blinded by Providence, which intended to punish the sacrilege he had committed in plundering the temple of Jerusalem, despised all that was said to him. He only desired Artabafus, who returned into his dominions, to bring him his troops as soon as possible.

I have said, that Providence blinded Crassus, which is self-evident in a great measure. But a Pagan writer makes the same remark upon it; this is Dion Cassius, a very judicious historian, and at the same time a warrior. He says, that the Romans under Crassus "had no salutary view, and were either ignorant upon all occasions of what was necessary to be done, or in no condition to execute it; so that one would have thought, that, condemned and pursued by some divinity, they could neither make use of their bodies nor minds." That Divinity was unknown to Dion.
It was He whom the Jewish nation adored, and who avenged the injury done to his temple.

Crassus made haste therefore to set forward. He had seven legions of foot, near four thousand horse, and as many light-armed soldiers and archers, which amounted in all to more than forty thousand men, that is to say, one of the finest armies the Romans ever set on foot. When his troops passed the bridge he had laid over the river Euphrates, near the city of Zeugma, a dreadful form of thunder and lightning drove in the face of the soldiers, as if to prevent them from going on. At the same time a black cloud, out of which burst an impetuous whirlwind, attended with thunder-claps and lightning, fell upon the bridge, and broke down a part of it. The troops were seized with fear and sadness. He endeavoured to re-animate them in the best manner he was able, promising them with an oath, that they should march back by the way of Armenia; and concluding his discourse with assuring them, that not one of them should return that way. Those last words, which were ambiguous, and had escaped him very imprudently, threw the whole army into the greatest trouble and dismay. Crassus well knew the bad effect they had produced; but out of a spirit of obstinacy and haughtiness, he neglected to remedy it, by explaining the sense of those words, to re-affure the timorous.

He made his troops advance along the Euphrates. His scouts, whom he had sent out for intelligence, returned, and reported, that there was not a single man to be seen in the country, but that they had found the marks of abundance of horse, which seemed to have fled suddenly, as if they had been pursued.

Upon this advice, Crassus confirmed himself in his hopes, and his soldiers began to despise the Parthians, as men that would never have courage to stand a charge, and come to blows with them. Cassius advised him at least to approach some town, where they had a garrison, in order to re-inf the army a little, and have time to learn the true number of the enemies, their force, and what designs they had in view; or if Crassus did not approve that counsel, to march along the Euphrates towards Seleucia; because, by always keeping upon the coast of that river, he would put it out of the power of the Parthians to surround him; and that, with the fleet which might follow him, provisions might be always brought from Syria, and all other things of which the army might stand in need. This Cassius was Crassus's questor, and the same who afterwards killed Caesar.

Crassus, after having considered this advice, was upon the point of coming into it, when a chief of the Arabians, named Ariamnes, came in unexpectedly, and had the address to make him approve a quite different plan. That Arab had formerly served under Pompey, and was known by many of the Roman soldiers, who looked upon him as a friend. Surena found him entirely qualified to play the part he gave him. Accordingly, when he was conducted to Crassus, he informed him, that the Parthians would not look the Roman army in the face; that its name alone had already spread an universal terror among their troops, and that there wanted no more for the obtaining a complete victory, than to march directly up to them, and give them battle. He offered to be their guide himself, and to carry them the shortest way. Crassus, blinded by his flattery, and deceived by a man who knew how to give a specious turn to what he proposed, gave entirely into the snare, notwithstanding the prevailing instances of Cassius, and some others, who suspected that impostor's design.

Crassus would hearken to nobody. The traitor Ariamnes, after having persuaded him to draw off from the banks of the Euphrates, conducted him across the plain by a way at first level and easy, but which at length became difficult from the deep sands, on which the army found itself engaged in the midst of a vast country all bare, and of a frightful dreariness, where the eye could discover neither end or boundary, nor the troops hope to find rest and refreshment. If thirsty, and the fatigue of the way, discouraged the Romans, the prospect of the country alone threw them into a despair still more terrible: For they could perceive neither near them, nor at a distance, the least tree, plant, or brook; not so much as an hill, nor a single blade of grass; nothing was to be seen all round but heaps of burning sand.

This gave just reason to suspect some treachery, of which the arrival of couriers from Artabafus ought to have fully convinced them. That prince informed Crassus, that king Orodes had invaded his dominions with a great army; that the war he had to support, prevented him from sending the aid he had promised; but that he advised him to approach Armenia, in order to their uniting their forces against the common enemy: That, if he would not follow that advice, he cautioned him at least to avoid, in his marches and encampments, the open plains, and such places as were commodious for the horse, and to keep always close to the mountains. Crassus, instead of giving ear to these wise counsels, flew out against them that gave them; and without vouchsafing to write an answer to Artabafus, he only told his couriers, " I have not time at present to consider the affairs of Armenia: I shall go thither soon, and shall then punish Artabafus for his treachery."

Crassus was so full of his Arab, and so blinded by his artful suggestions, that he had continued to follow him without the least distrust, notwithstanding all the advice that was given him, till he had brought him a great way into the sandy desert we have mentioned. The traitor then made his escape, and gave Surena an account of what he had done.

After a march of some days in a desert of the enemy's country, where it was difficult to have any intelligence, the scouts came in full speed to inform Crassus, that a very numerous army of the Parthians advanced with great order and boldness to attack him immediately. That news threw the whole camp into great trouble and consternation. Crassus was more affected with it than the
ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS.

the rest. He made all possible haste to draw up his army in battle. At first, following the advice of Caius, he extended his infantry as far as he could, that it might take up the more ground, and make it difficult for the enemy to surround him; he posted all his cavalry upon the wings. But afterwards he changed his opinion, and drawing up his foot in close order, he made them form a large hollow square, facing on all sides, of which each flank had twelve * cohorts in front. Every cohort had a company of horse near it, in order that each part, being equally sustained by the cavalry, the whole body might charge with greater security and boldness. He gave one of the wings to Caius, the other to his young son Crauus, and posted himself in the center.

They advanced in this order to the banks of a brook which had not much water, but was however exceedingly grateful to the soldiers, from the exceeding drought and excessive heat.

Most of the officers were of opinion, that it was proper to encamp in this place, to give the troops time to recover the extraordinary fatigues they had undergone in a long and painful march, and to rest there during the night; that in the mean time, all possible endeavours should be used to get intelligence of the enemy, and that when their number and disposition were known, they might attack them the next day. But Crauus suffering himself to be carried away by the ardour of his son, and of the horse under his command, who pressed him to lead them against the enemy, gave orders, that all who had occasion for refreshment should eat under arms in their ranks; and scarce allowing them time for that purpose, he commanded them to march, and led them on, not slowly, and halting sometimes, but with rapidity, and as fast as they could move, till they came in view of the enemy. Contrary to their expectation, they did not appear either so numerous or so terrible, as

* The Roman cohort was a body of hundred men; and differed very little of infantry consisting of five or six from what is now called a battalion.
as they had been represented, which was a stratagem of Surena's. He had concealed the greatest part of his battalions behind the advanced troops, and to prevent their being perceived by the brightness of their arms, he had given them orders to cover themselves with their veils or with skins.

When they approached, and were ready to charge, the Parthian general had no sooner given the signal of battle, than the whole field resounded with dreadful cries, and the most frightful noise. For the Parthians did not excite their troops to battle with horns or trumpets, but made use of a great number of hollow instruments, covered with leather, and having bells of brass round them, which they struck violently against each other, the noise made by these instruments was rude and terrible, and seemed like the roaring of wild beasts, joined with claps of thunder. Those Barbarians had well observed, that of all the senses none disorder the soul more than the hearing; that it strikes upon, and affects it the most immediately, and is the most sudden in making it in a manner change its nature.

The trouble and dismay into which this noise had cast the Romans, were quite different, when the Parthians, throwing off on a sudden the covering of their arms, appeared all on fire, from the exceeding brightness of their helmets and cuirasses, which were of burning steel, and glittered like sun-beams, and to which the furniture and armour of their horses added not a little. At their head appeared Surena, handsome, well-made, of an advantageous stature, and of a much greater reputation for valour than the effeminacy of his mien seemed to promise. For he painted after the fashion of the Medes, and, like them, wore his hair curled and dressed with art; whereas the Parthians still perjured in wearing theirs after the manner of the Scythians, much neglected, and such as nature gave them, in order to appear more terrible.

At first the Barbarians were for charging the Romans with their pikes, and endeavoured to penetrate and and break the front ranks; but having observed the depth of the hollow square, so well closed, and even, in which the troops stood firm and supported each other successfully, they fell back, and retired in a seeming confusion, as if their order of battle were broke.
But the Romans were much astonished to see their whole army surrounded on all sides. Crafsius immediately gave orders for his archers and light-armed foot to charge them; but they could not execute those orders long; for they were reduced by an hail of arrows to retire, and cover themselves behind their heavy-armed foot.

Their disorder and dismay began now, upon experiencing the rapidity and force of those arrows, against which no armour was proof, and which penetrated alike whatever they hit. The Parthians dividing, applied themselves to shooting at a distance, without its being possible for them to miss, tho' they had endeavoured it, so close were the Romans embattled. They did dreadful execution, and made depth wounds, because drawing their bows to the utmolt, the strings discharged their arrows of an extraordinary weight, with an impetuousity and force that nothing could resist.

The Romans, attacked in this manner on all sides by the enemy, knew not in what manner to act. If they continued firm in their ranks, they were wounded mortally, and if they quitted them to charge the enemy, they could do them no hurt, and suffered no les than before. The Parthians fled before them, and kept a continual discharge as they retired; for of all nations in the world they were the most expert in that exercise after the Scythians: An operation in reality very wisely conceived; for in flying they saved their lives, and in fighting avoided the infamy of flight.

As long as the Romans had hopes, that the Barbarians, after having exhausted all their arrows, would either give over the fight, or come to blows with them hand to hand, they supported their distress with valour and resolution; but when they perceived that in the rear of the enemy, there were camels laden with arrows, whither those, who had exhausted their quivers, wheeled about to replenish them, Caesius, losing almost all courage, sent orders to his son to endeavour, whatever it cost him, to join the enemy, before he was entirely surrounded by them; for they were principally intent against him, and were wheeling about to take him in the rear.

Young Caesius, therefore, at the head of thirteen hundred horse, five hundred archers, and * eight cohorts armed with round bucklers, wheeled about against those who endeavoured to surround him. The latter, whether they were afraid to stand before a body of troops that came on with so good an aspect, or rather designed to draw off young Caesius, as far as they could from his father, immediately faced about and fled. Young Caesius upon that, crying out as loud as he could, *They don't stand us, pushed on full speed after them. The foot, animated by the example of the horse, piqued themselves upon not staying behind, and followed them at their heels, carried on by their eagerness, and the joy which the hopes of victory gave them. They firmly believed they had conquered, and had nothing to do but to pursue, till being at a great distance from their main body, they discovered their error; for those who had seemed to fly, faced about, and being joined by many other troops, came on to charge the Romans.

Young Caesius thereupon made his troops halt, in hopes that the enemy, upon seeing their small number, would not fail to attack them, and come to close fight. But those Barbarians contented themselves with opposing him in front with their heavy-armed horse, and sent out detachments of their light horse, that wheeling about, and surrounding them on all sides without joining them, poured in a perpetual flight of arrows upon them. At the same time, by firing up the heaps of sand, they raised so thick a dust, that the Romans

* They consisted of near six thousand men.
Romans could neither see nor speak to one another; and by being pent up in a narrow space, and keeping close order, they were a kind of butt for every arrow shot at them, and died by slow, but cruel deaths. For finding their entrails pierced, and not being able to support the pains they suffered, they rolled themselves upon the sands with the arrows in their bodies, and expired in that manner in exquisite torments; or endeavouring to tear out by force the bearded points of the arrows, which had penetrated across their veins and nerves, they only made their wounds the larger, and increased their pains.

Most of them died in this manner; and those who were still alive, were no longer in any condition to act. For when young Crassus exhorted them to charge the heavy-armed horse, they shewed him their hands nailed to their bucklers, and their feet pierced through and through, and rivetted to the ground; so that it was equally impossible for them either to defend themselves, or fly. Putting himself therefore at the head of his horse, he made a vigorous charge upon that heavy-armed body covered with iron, and threw himself boldly amongst the squadrons, but with great disadvantage, as well in attacking as defending. For his troops, with weak and short javelins, struck against armour either of excellent steel, or very hard leather; whereas the Barbarians charged the Gauls, who were either naked or lightly armed, with good and strong spears. These Gauls were troops in whom young Crassus placed the greatest confidence, and with whom he did most wonderful exploits. For those troops took hold of the spears of the Parthians, and closing with them, seized them by the neck, and threw them off their horses upon the ground, where they lay without power to stir, from the exceeding weight of their arms. Several of the Gauls quitting their horses, crept under those of the enemy, and thrust their swords into their bellies. The horses, wild with the pain, leaped and reared, and throwing off their riders, trampled them under under foot as well as the enemy, and fell dead upon both.

But what gave the Gauls most trouble, was heat and thirst; for they were not accustomed to support them. They lost also the greatest part of their horses, which running precipitately upon that heavy-armed body, killed themselves upon their spears. They were obliged therefore to retire to their infantry, and to carry off young Crassus, who had received several dangerous wounds.

Upon their way they saw, at a small distance, a rising bank of sand, to which they retired. They fastened their horses in the center, and made an enclosure with their bucklers, by way of entrenchment; in hopes that it would assist them considerably in defending themselves against the Barbarians; but it happened quite otherwise. For in an even place, the front covered the rear, and gave it some relaxation; whereas upon this hill, the inequality of the ground shewing them over each other’s heads, and those in the rear most, they were all exposed to the enemy’s shot. So that, unable to avoid the arrows, which the Barbarians showered continually upon them, they were all equally the marks of them; and deplored their unhappy destiny, in perishing miserably, without being able to make use of their arms, or to give the enemy proofs of their valour.

Young Crassus had two Greeks with him, who had settled in that country in the city of Carræ. Those two young men, touched with compassion to see him in so sad a condition, pressed him to make off with them, and to retire into the city of Ischnes, which had espoused the party of the Romans, and was not very remote. But he replied, That the fear of no death, however cruel, could induce him to abandon so many brave men, who died out of love for him. A noble sentiment for a young lord! He ordered them to make off as fast as they could, and embracing them, dismissed them the service. For himself, not being able to make use of his hand, which was shot through with with an arrow, he commanded one of his domesticks to thrust his sword through him, and presented his side to him. The principal officers killed themselves, and many of those that remained were slain, fighting with exceeding valour. The Parthians made only about five hundred prisoners, and after having cut off young Craflus’s head, marched immediately against his father.

The latter, after having ordered his son to charge the Parthians, and received advice, that they were put to the rout, and pursued vigorously, had resumed some courage, and the more, because those who opposed him, seemed to abate considerably of their ardour; for the greatest part of them were gone with the rest against young Craflus. Wherefore, drawing his army together, he retired to a small hill in his rear, in hopes that his son would speedily return from the pursuit.

Of a great number of officers, sent successively by his son to inform him of the danger he was in, the greatest part had fallen into the hands of the Barbarians, who had put them to the sword. Only the last, who had escaped with great difficulty, got to his presence, and declared to him, that his son was lost, if he did not send him directly a powerful reinforcement. Upon this news, Craflus was struck with such a diversity of afflicting thoughts, and his reason thereby so much disturbed, that he was no longer capable of seeing or hearing any thing. However, the desire of saving his son and the army, determined him to go to his aid, and he ordered the troops to march.

The Parthians, who returned from the defeat of young Craflus, arrived that moment with great cries and longs of victory, which from far apprized the unfortunate father of his misfortune. The Barbarians, carrying the head of young Craflus upon the end of a spear, approached the Romans, and insulting them with the most scornful bravadoes, they asked them of what family and relations that young Roman Roman was: For, said they, it is impossible that a young man of such extraordinary valour and bravery should be the son of so base and cowardly a father as Cæfarius.

This fight exceedingly dispirited the Romans, and instead of exciting the height of anger, and the desire of revenge in them, froze them with terror and dismay. Cæfarius, however, shewed more constancy and courage on his disgrace, than he had done before; and running through the ranks, he cried out, "Romans, this mourning regards only me. The fortune and glory of Rome are still invulnerable and invincible, whilst you continue firm and intrepid. If you have any compassion for a father, who has just now lost a son, whose valour you admired, let it appear in your rage and resentment against the Barbarians. Deprive them of their insolent joy, punish their cruelty, and do not suffer yourselves to be cast down by my misfortune. There is a necessity for experiencing some losses, when we aspire at great achievements. Lucullus did not defeat Tigranes, nor Scipio, Antiochus, without costing them some blood. It is after the greatest defeats that Rome has acquired the greatest victories. It is not by the favour of fortune she has attained to so high a degree of power, but by her patience and fortitude in supporting herself with vigour against adversity."

Cæfarius endeavoured by remonstrances of this kind to re-animate his troops: But when he had given them orders to raise the cry of battle, he perceived the general discouragement of his army, even in that cry itself, which was faint, unequal, and timorous; whereas that of the enemy was bold, full, and frenzous.

The charge being given in consequence, the light-horse of the Parthians dispersed themselves upon the wings of the Romans, and taking them in flank, distressed them extremely with their arrows, whilst the heavy cavalry attacked them in front, and obliged them them to close up in one great body; except those, who, to avoid the arrows, of which the wounds occasioned a long and painful death, had the courage to throw themselves upon the horse, like men in despair. Though they did not do them much hurt, their audacity was attended with this advantage; it occasioned their dying immediately, by the large and deep wounds they received. For the Barbarians thrust their lances through their bodies with such force and vigour, that they often killed two at once.

After having fought in that manner the remainder of the day, upon night’s coming on, the Barbarians retired; saying, they would grant Crassus only that night to lament for his son, unless he should find it more expedient to consult his own safety, and prefer going voluntarily to being dragged to their king Arses. They then encamped in the presence of the Roman army, in the firm expectation, that the next day they should meet with little or no difficulty in completing its defeat.

This was a terrible night for the Romans. They had no thoughts either of interring their dead, or of dressing their wounded, of whom the greatest part died in the most horrible torments. Every man was solely intent upon his particular distress. For they all saw plainly, that they could not escape, whether they waited for day in camp, or ventured, during the night, to throw themselves into that immense plain, of which they saw no end. Besides which, in the latter choice, their wounded gave them great trouble. For to carry them off, would be very difficult, and extremely retard their flight; and if they were left behind, it was not to be doubted but they would discover the departure of the army by their cries and lamentations.

Though they were perfectly sensible, that Crassus alone was the cause of all their misfortunes, they however were unanimous in desiring to see his face, and to hear his voice. But for him, lying upon the ground, in an obscure corner, with his head covered... covered in his cloke, he was to the vulgar, says Plutarch, a great example of the instability of fortune; to wife and considerate persons, a still greater of the pernicious effects of temerity and ambition, which had blinded him to such a degree, that he could not bear to be less at Rome than the first of so many millions of men, and thought himself low and mean, because there were two above him, Cæsar and Pompey.

Octavius, one of his lieutenants, and Cassius approached him, and endeavoured to make him rise, and to console and encourage him. But seeing him entirely depressed by the weight of his affliction, and deaf to all consolation and remonstrance, they assembled the principal officers, and held a council of war directly; and it being their unanimous opinion, that it was necessary to retire immediately, they decamped without sound of trumpet. This was done at first with great silence. But soon after the sick and wounded, who could not follow, perceiving themselves abandoned, filled the camp with tumult and confusion, cries, shrieks, and horrible lamentations; so that the troops, who marched foremost, were seized with trouble and terror, imagining the enemy were coming on to attack them. By frequently turning back, and drawing up in battle, or busying themselves in setting the wounded who followed them upon the beasts of carriage, and in dismounting such as were less sick, they lost abundance of time. There were only three hundred horse, under the command of Ignatius, who did not stop, and arrived about midnight at the city of Carrae. Ignatius called to the sentinels upon the walls, and when they answered, bade them go to Coponius, who commanded in the place, and tell him that Cassius had fought a great battle with the Parthians; and without saying any more, or letting them know who he was, he pushed on with all possible expedition to the bridge Cassius had laid over the Euphrates, and saved his troops by that means.
means. But he was very much blamed for having abandoned his general.

However, the message he had sent to Coponius by those guards, was of great service to Craflus. For that governor, wisely conjecturing from the manner in which the unknown person had given him that intelligence, that it implied some disaster, gave orders immediately for the garrison to stand to their arms. And when he was informed of the way Craflus had taken, he marched out to meet him, and conducted him and his army into the city. The Parthians, though well informed of his flight, would not pursue him in the dark. But the next day early entered the camp, and put all the wounded, who had been left there, to the number of four thousand, to the sword; and their cavalry being dispersed over the plain after those who fled, took abundance of them, whom they found straggling on all sides.

One of Craflus's lieutenants, named Vargunteius, having separated in the night from the grots of the army with four cohorts, missed his way, and was found the next morning upon a small eminence by the Barbarians, who attacked him. He defended himself with great valour, but was at length overpowered by multitudes, and all his soldiers killed, except twenty, who, with sword in hand, fell on the enemy in despair, in order to open themselves a passage through them. The Barbarians were so much astonished at their bravery, that out of admiration of it, they opened, and gave them a passage. They arrived safe at Carrae.

At the same time Surena received false advice, that Craflus had escaped with the best of his troops, and that those who had retired to Carrae, were only a militia, that were not worth the trouble of pursuing. Surena, believing the reward of his victory lost, but still uncertain whether it were or not, desired to be better informed, in order to his resolving either to besiege Carrae, if Craflus was there, or to pursue him if he had quitted it. He therefore dispatched one of his his interpreters, who spoke both languages perfectly well, with orders to approach the walls of Carrae, and in the Roman language to desire to speak with Craffus himself or Cassius, and to say, That Surena demanded a conference with them.

The interpreter having executed his orders, Craffus accepted the proposal with joy. Soon after some Arabian soldiers came from the Barbarians, who knew Craffus and Cassius by sight, from having seen them in the camp before the battle. Those soldiers approached the place, and seeing Cassius upon the walls, they told him, That Surena was inclined to treat with them, and permit them to retire, upon condition that they would continue in amity with the king his master, and abandon Mesopotamia to him: That this was more advantageous for both parties, than to proceed to the last extremities.

Cassius came into this, and demanded that the time and place for an interview between Surena and Cassius should immediately be fixed. The Arabians affured him, that they would go and do their utmost to that effect, and withdrew.

Surena, overjoyed with keeping his prey in a place from whence it could not escape, marched thither the next day with his Parthians, who talked at first with extreme haughtiness, and declared, that if the Romans expected any favourable terms from them, they must previously deliver up Craffus and Cassius bound hand and foot into their hands. The Romans, enraged at such exceeding deceit, told Craffus, that it was necessary to renounce all remote and vain hopes of aid from the Armenians, and fly that very night, without losing a moment's time. It was highly important, that not one of the inhabitants of Carrae should know this design, till the instant of its execution. But Andromachus, one of the citizens, was informed of it first, and by Craffus himself, who confided it to him, and chose him for his guide, relying very injudiciously upon his fidelity:

The
The Parthians in consequence were not long before they were fully apprized of the whole plan, by the means of that traitor. But as it was not their custom to engage in the night, the impostor, to prevent Craulis from getting too much ground as might make it impossible for the Parthians to come up with him, led the Romans sometimes by one way, sometimes by another, and at length brought them into deep marshy grounds, and places abounding with great ditches, where it was very difficult to march, and necessary to make a great many turnings and windings to extricate themselves out of that labyrinth.

There were some who, suspecting that it was with no good design Andromachus made them go backwards and forwards in that manner, refused at last to follow him, and Cassius himself returned towards Carræ. By hasty marches he escaped into Syria with five hundred horse. Most of the rest, who had truly guides, gained the pass of the mountains called Sinnachi, and were in a place of safety before the break of day. The latter might be about five thousand men, under the command of Octavius.

As for Craulis, the day overtook him, still embarrassed by the contrivance of the perfidious Andromachus in those marshy and difficult places. He had with him four cohorts of foot armed with round bucklers, a few horse, and five lictors who carried the fasces before him. He at length came into the main road, after abundance of trouble and difficulty, when the enemy were almost upon him, and he had no more than twelve stadia to make, before he joined the troops under Octavius. All he could do, was to gain as soon as possible another summit of those mountains, less impracticable to the horse, and in consequence not so secure. This was under that of the Sinnachi, to which it was joined by a long chain of mountains, that filled up all the space between them. Octavius therefore saw plainly the danger that threatened Craulis, and descended first himself from those eminences, with a small number of soldiers, to his aid. But he was soon followed by all the rest, who, reproaching themselves for their cowardice, flew to his assistance. Upon their arrival they charged the Barbarians so rudely, that they obliged them to abandon the hill. After that they placed Crassus in the midst of them, and forming a kind of rampart for him with their bucklers, they declared fiercely, that not an arrow of the enemy should approach their general's body, till they were all dead round him, fighting in his defence.

Surena, seeing that the Parthians, already repulsed, went on with less vigour to the attack, and if the night came on, and the Romans should make the mountains, that it would be impossible for him to take them, he had again recourse to stratagem to amuse Crassus. He gave secret orders, that some prisoners should be set at liberty, after having posted a number of his soldiers around them, who, seeming in discourse together, said, as the general report of the army, that the king was much averse to continuing war with the Romans; that, on the contrary, his design was to cultivate their amity, and to give them proofs of his favourable inclinations, by treating Crassus with great humanity. And that the effects might agree with their expressions, as soon as the prisoners were released, the Barbarians retired from the fight, and Surena, advancing peaceably with his principal officers towards the hill, with his bow unstrung, and arms extended, invited Crassus to come down and treat of an accommodation. He said with a loud voice; That, contrary to the king his master's will, and through the necessity of a just defence, he had made them experience the force and power of the Parthian arms; and that at present he was disposed to treat them with mildness and favour, by granting them peace, and giving them liberty to retire with entire security on his part. We have observed on more than one occasion, that the peculiar characteristick of these Barbarians, was to promote the success of their designs by fraud and treachery, and to make no no scruple of breaking through their engagements upon such occasions.
ALEXANDER's SUCCESSORS.

The troops of Craffus lent a willing ear to this discourse of Surena's, and expressed exceeding joy at it: But Craffus, who had experienced nothing but deceit and perfidy from the Barbarians, and to whom so sudden a change was very suspicious, did not easily give into it, and deliberated with his friends. The soldiers began to call out to him, and to urge him to accept the interview. From thence they proceeded to outrage and reproaches; and went so far as to accuse him of cowardice; charging him with exposing them to be slaughtered by enemies, with whom he had not so much as the courage to speak, when they appeared unarmed before him.

Craffus at first had recourse to entreaties, and remonstrated to them, that by maintaining their ground, for the rest of the day, upon the eminences and difficult places, where they then were, they might easily save themselves when night came on: He even shewed them the way, and exhorted them not to frustrate such hopes of their approaching safety. But seeing they grew outrageous, that they were ready to mutiny, and by striking their swords upon their shields, even menaced him; apprehending that commotion, he began to descend, and turning about, he only said these few words: "Octavius, and you "Petronius, with all the officers and captains here "present, you see the necessity I am under of tak- "ing a step I would willingly avoid; and are wit- "ness of the indignities and violence I suffer. But "I beg you, when you have retired in safety, that "you will tell all the world, for the honour of Rome "our common mother, that Craffus perished, de- "ceived by the enemy, and not abandoned by his "citizens." Octavius and Petronius could not resolve to let him go alone, but went down the hill with him, when Craffus dismissed his lictors, who would have followed him.

E 2    The
The first persons the Barbarians sent to him were two Greeks, who dismounting from their horses, saluted him with profound respect, and told him in the Greek tongue, that he had only to send some of his attendants, and Surena would satisfy him, that himself, and those with him, came without arms, and with all the fidelity and good intentions possible. Crassus replied, that had he set the least value upon his life, he should not have come to have put himself into their hands; and sent two brothers, named Roscius, to know only upon what foot they should treat, and in what number.

Surena caused those two brothers to be seized and kept prisoners, and advancing on horseback, followed by the principal officers of his army, as soon as he perceived Crassus, What do I see! said he. What! the general of the Romans on foot, and we on horseback! Let an horse be brought for him immediately. He imagined, that Crassus appeared in that manner before him out of respect. Crassus replied, That there was no reason to be surprized that they came to an interview, each after the * custom of his own country. Very good, returned Surena, from henceforth let there be a treaty of peace between king Orodes and the Romans: But we must go to prepare and sign the articles of it upon the banks of the Euphrates. For you Romans, added he, do not always remember your conventions. At the same time he held out his hand to him. Crassus would have sent for an horse; but Surena told him, there was no occasion for it, and that the king made him a present of that.

A horse was immediately presented to him, which had a golden bit; and the king's officers, taking him round the middle, set him upon it, surrounded him, and began to strike the horse to make him go forwards fast. Octavius was the first, who, offended at such such behaviour, took the horse by the bridle. Petronius secon ded him, and afterwards all the rest of his attendants, who came round him, and endeavoured to stop the horse, and to make those retire by force, who pressed Crassus forwards. At first they pushed against each other with great tumult and disorder, and afterwards came to blows. Octavius, drawing his sword, killed a groom of one of those Barbarians. At the same time another of them gave Octavius a great wound with his sword behind, which laid him dead upon the spot. Petronius, who had no shield, received a stroke upon his cuirass, and leaped from his horse without being wounded. Crassus at the same moment was killed by a Parthian. Of those that were present, some were killed fighting around Crassus, and others retired in good time to the hill.

* Amongst the Romans the consul always marched on foot, at the head of infantry.

The Parthians soon followed them thither, and told them, that Crassus had suffered the punishment due to his treachery; but for them, that Surena let them know they had only to come down with confidence, and gave them his word that they should suffer no ill treatment. Upon his promise some went down, and put themselves into the hands of the enemy; others took the advantage of the night, and dispersed on all sides. But of the latter very few escaped; all the rest were pursued the next day by the Arabians, who came up with them and put them to the sword.

The loss of this battle was the most terrible blow the Romans had received from the battle of Cannae. They had twenty thousand men killed in it, and ten thousand taken prisoners. The rest made their escape by different ways into Armenia, Cilicia, and Syria; and out of these wrecks another army was afterwards formed in Syria, of which Cassius took upon him the command, and with it prevented that country from falling into the hands of the victor.

This defeat ought in one sense to have been more affecting to them than that of the battle of Cannae, because because they had less reason to expect it. When Hannibal was victorious at Cannæ, Rome was in a state of humiliation. She had already lost many battles, and had no thought but of defending herself, and repulsing the enemy. At this time Rome was triumphant, respected, and formidable to all nations: She was mistress of the most potent kingdoms of Europe, Asia, and Africa, lately victorious over one of the most powerful enemies she ever had; yet in the most exalted height of her greatness, she saw her glory suddenly fall to the ground, in an attack upon a people, formed out of the assemblage of the eastern nations, whose valour she despised, and whom she reckoned already amongst her conquests. So complete a victory shewed those haughty conquerors of the world a rival remote people, capable of making head against, and disputing the empire of the universe with them; and not only of setting bounds to their ambitious projects, but of making them apprehend for their own safety. It shewed that the Romans might be overthrown in a pitched battle, and fighting with all their forces; that that power, which till then, like the inundation of a mighty sea, had overflowed all the countries in its way, might at length receive bounds, and be restrained for the future within them.

The check received by Crassus from the Parthians, was a blot on the Roman name, which the victories gained some time after by Ventidius were not capable of effacing. The standards of the vanquished legions were always shewn by them as sights. The prisoners taken in that fatal day were kept there in captivity, and the Romans, citizens or allies, contracted igno-

* Milefne Crass conjuge barbara Turpis maritus vixit? Et hostium (Proh Curia, inverfive mores!)
Confenuit fecerorum in armis
Sub rege Medo, Marfus & Appulus, Anciliorum, nominis, & togæ Oblitus, æternæque Vetus, Incolumi Jove, & urbe Roma?
ignominious marriages to the shame of Rome, as Horace emphatically describes it, and grew old in tranquillity, upon the lands, and under the standard of the Barbarians. It was not till thirty years after, in the reign of Augustus, that the king of the Parthians, without being compelled to it by arms, consented to restore their standards and prisoners to the Romans; which was looked upon by Augustus, and the whole empire, as a most glorious triumph; so much were the Romans humbled by the remembrance of that defeat, and so much did they believe it incumbent on them to efface it, if possible, to the least trace! For themselves they never could forget it. Caesar was upon the point of setting out against the Parthians, to avenge the affront Rome had received from them, when he was killed. Anthony formed the same design, which turned to his disgrace. The Romans, from that time, always regarded the war with the Parthians as the most important of their wars. It was the object of the application of their most warlike emperors, Trajan, Septimus, Severus, &c. The surname of Parthicus was the title of which they were fondest, and most sensibly flattered their ambition. If the Romans sometimes passed the Euphrates to extend their conquests beyond it, the Parthians in their turn did the same, to carry their arms and devastations into Syria, and even into Palestine. In a word, the Romans could never subject the Parthians to their yoke, and that nation was like a wall of brass, which with impregnable force resisted the most violent attacks of their power.

When the battle of Carræ was fought, Orodes was in Armenia, where he had lately concluded a peace with Artabasus. The latter, upon the return of the express he had sent to Crassus, perceiving, by the false measures he took, that the Romans were infallibly lost, treated an accommodation with Orodes, and by giving one of his daughters to Pacorus, the son of the Parthian king, he cemented by that alliance the treaty he had lately made. Whilst they were celebrating the nuptials, the head and hand of Crassus were brought to them, which Surena had caused to be cut off, and sent the king as a proof of his victory. Their joy was exceedingly augmented by that sight, and it was said that orders were given to pour molten gold into the mouth of that head, to reproach the insatiable thirst which Crassus always had for that metal.

Surena did not long enjoy the pleasure of his victory. His master, jealous of his glory, and of the credit it gave him, caused him to be put to death soon after. There are princes, near whom too shining qualities are dangerous, who take umbrage at the virtues they are forced to admire, and cannot bear to be served by superior talents, capable of eclipsing their own. Orodes was of this character. He perceived, as Tacitus observes of Tiberius, that with all his power he could not sufficiently repay the service his general had lately done him. Now, when a benefit is above all return, ingratitude, and hatred take place, instead of acknowledgment and affection. Surena was a general of extraordinary merit. He was of consummate ability at thirty years of age, and surpassed all men of his times in valour. He was, besides that, perfectly well made, and of the most advantageous stature. For riches, credit, and authority, he had also more than any man, and was, undoubtedly, the greatest subject the king of Parthia had. His birth gave him the privilege of putting the crown upon the king's head at his coronation, and that right had appertained to his family from the re-establishment of the empire. When he travelled, he had always a thousand camels to carry his baggage, two hundred chariots for his wives and concubines, and for his guard, a thousand horse completely armed, besides a great number of light-armed troops, and domesticks,

* Dei trui per hæc fortunam Sūsm Cesar, imparemque tanto merito rebatur. Nam beneficia eō usque lata sunt dum videos ex solvi poffe; ubi multum ante venere, pro gratia odium redditur. Tacit. Annal. I. iv. c. 18.

domesticks, which in all did not amount to less than ten thousand men.

- The Parthians expecting, after the defeat of the Roman army, to find Syria without defence, marched to conquer it. But Cassius, who had formed an army out of the ruins of the other, received them with so much vigour, that they were obliged to repass the Euphrates shamefully, without effecting any thing.

The next (a) year the consuls, M. Calpurnius Bibulus and M. Tullius Cicero, were assigned the provinces of Syria and Cilicia. Cicero repaired immediately to the latter, which had been allotted him; but Bibulus amusing himself at Rome, Cassius continued to command in Syria. And that was much to the advantage of the Romans; for the affairs of that country required a man of a quite different capacity to Bibulus. Pacorus, son of Orodes king of the Parthians, had passed the Euphrates in the beginning of the spring, at the head of a numerous army, and had entered Syria. He was too young to command alone, and was therefore accompanied by Orfaces, an old general, who disposed of every thing. He marched directly to Antioch, which he besieged. Cassius had shut himself up in that place with all his troops. Cicero, who had received advice of his condition in his province, by the means of Antiochus king of Comagena, assembled all his forces, and marched to the eastern frontier of his province, which bordered upon Armenia, to oppose an invasion on that side, should the Armenians attempt it, and at the same time to be at hand to support Cassius in case of need. He sent another body of troops towards the mountain Amanus, with the same view. That detachment fell in with a great detachment of the Parthian cavalry, which had entered Cilicia, and entirely defeated it, so that not a single man escaped.

The news of this defeat, and that of Cicero's approach

proach to Antioch, extremely encouraged Cassius and his troops to make a good defence, and so much abated the ardour of the Parthians, that despairing to carry the place, they raised the siege, and went to form that of Antigonia, which was not far from thence. But they were so little skilled in attacking towns, that they miscarried again before this, and were reduced to retire. That was no wonder; the Parthians made their principal force consist in cavalry, and applied themselves most to field-battle, which suited their genius best. Cassius, who was apprized of the rout they would take, laid an ambuscade for them, which they did not fail to fall into. He defeated them entirely, and killed a great number of them, amongst whom was their general Orfaces. The remains of their army repassed the Euphrates.

When Cicero saw the Parthians removed, and Antioch out of danger, he turned his arms against the inhabitants of mount Amanus, who being situate between Syria and Cilicia, were independent of, and at war with both those provinces. They made continual incursions into them, and gave them great trouble. Cicero entirely subjected those mountaineers, and took and demolished all their castles and forts. He afterwards marched against another barbarous nation, a kind of savages, who called themselves \((b)\) free Cilicians, and pretended to have never been subjected to the empire of any of the kings, who had been masters of the countries round about. He took all their cities, and made such dispositions in the country, as very much pleased all their neighbours, whom they perpetually harassed.

It is Cicero himself, who relates these circumstances in several of his letters. There are two among the rest, which may be looked upon as perfect models of the manner in which a general, or commander, ought to give a prince, or his ministry, an account of a military expedition; with such simplicity, perspicuity, and precision, in which the proper character of writings writings and relations of this kind consists, are they expressed. The first is addressed to the senate and people of Rome, and to the principal magistrates; it is the second of his fifteenth book of familiar epistles; the other is wrote particularly to Cato. This last is a master-piece, wherein Cicero, who passionately desired the honour of a triumph for his military expeditions, employs all the art and address of eloquence to engage that grave senator in his favour. Plutarch tells us (c), that after his return to Rome, the senate offered him a triumph, and that he refused it, upon account of the civil war then ready to break out between Caesar and Pompey; not believing that it became him to celebrate a solemnity which breathed nothing but joy, at a time when the state was upon the point of falling into the greatest calamities. His refusal to triumph in the midst of the apprehensions and disorders of a bloody civil war, argues in Cicero a great love for the publick good and his country, and does him much more honour than a triumph itself could have done.

\(\text{\textit{(b) Eleutherus Cilices.}}\)

During the civil war between Pompey and Caesar, and those that followed, the Parthians, declaring sometimes for one, and sometimes for the other party, made several irruptions into Syria and Palestine. But those are events, which particularly relate to the Roman or Jewish histories, and therefore do not enter into my plan.

I shall conclude this abridgment of that of the Parthians, with the deaths of Pacorus and Orodes his father. Ventidius, who commanded the Roman armies, under the authority of Anthony the triumvir, did not a little contribute to the re-establishing the honour of the nation. He was a soldier of fortune, who, from the lowest condition of (d) life, had raised himself by his merit to the highest dignities of the republick. In the war against the allies of Rome, who attempted to extort the freedom of the city by force, force, he was taken an infant, with his mother, in Asculum, the capital of the Picenians, by Strabo, the father of Pompey the Great, and led in triumph before that general. Supported by the credit of C. Cæsar, under whom he had served in Gaul, and passed through all the degrees of the army, he became praetor and consul. He was the only person that triumphed for his exploits against the Parthians, and obtained that honour, after having been led in a triumph himself.

I have said, that Ventidius contributed very much to make the Romans amends for the affront they had received at the battle of Carræ. He had began to revenge the defeat of Caesar and his army, by two successive victories gained over those terrible enemies. A third, still greater than the former, completed the work, and was obtained in this manner.

That (e) general, apprehending the Parthians, whose preparations were much advanced, would prevent him, and pass the Euphrates before he had time to draw all his troops together out of their different quarters, had recourse to this stratagem. There was a petty eastern prince in his camp, under the name of an ally, whom he knew to be entirely in the interests of the Parthians, and that he held secret intelligence with them, and gave them advice of all the designs of the Romans, which he could discover. He resolved to make this man's treachery the means to draw the Parthians into a snare he had laid for them.

With that view he had contracted a more than ordinary intimacy with this traitor. He conversed frequently with him upon the operations of the campaign. Affecting at length to open himself to him with great confidence, he observed, that he was much afraid, from advices he had received, that the Parthians did not design to pass the Euphrates at Zeugma, as usual, but a great way lower. For, said he, if they pass at Zeugma, the country on this side is so mountainous, tainous, that the cavalry, in which the whole force of their army consists, can do us no great hurt. But if they pass below, there are nothing but plains, where they have all manner of advantages against us, and it will be impossible for us to make head against them. As soon as he had imparted this secret to him, the spy did not fail, as Ventidius had rightly foreseen, to communicate it to the Parthians, with whom it had all the effect he could desire. Pacorus, instead of going to Zeugma, immediately took the other rout, lost abundance of time in the great compass he was obliged to take, and in the preparations necessary for passing the river there. Ventidius got forty days by this means, which he employed in making Silon of Judæa join him, with the legions quartered on the other side of the mount Taurus, and found himself in a condition to give the Parthians a good reception when they entered Syria.

As they saw that they had not been attacked either in passing the river, or afterwards, they attributed that inactivity to terror and cowardice, and marched directly to charge the enemy in their camp, though situated very advantageously upon an eminence, not doubting but they should soon make themselves masters of it, and that without much resistance. They were mistaken. The Romans quitted their camp, fell on them with impetuosity, and pushed them with the utmost vigour upon the declivity; and as they had the advantage of the ground, and their light-armed troops poured showers of darts upon the Parthians, they soon put them into disorder, notwithstanding the vigorous resistance they made at first. The slaughter was very great. Pacorus was killed in the battle, and his death was followed immediately with the flight of his whole army. The vanquished made haste to regain the bridge, in order to return into their own country; but the Romans prevented them, and cut the greatest part of them in pieces. Some few escaping by flight, retired to Antiochus king of Comagena. History observes, that this celebrated battle, which so well revenged the defeat of Crassus, was fought exactly on the same day with the battle of Carræ fourteen years before.

* Orodes was so struck with the loss of this battle, and the death of his son, that he was almost out of his senses. For several days he neither opened his mouth, nor took any nourishment. When the excess of his grief was a little abated, and would permit him to speak, nothing was heard from him but the name of Pacorus. He imagined that he saw him, and called to him; he seemed to discourse with him, and as if he were living, to speak to him, and hear him speak. At other times he remembered that he was dead, and shed a torrent of tears.

Never was grief more just. This was the most fatal blow for the Parthian monarchy it had ever received; nor was the loss of the prince less than that of the army itself. For he was the most excellent person the houfe of the Arsacides had ever produced, for justice, clemency, valour, and all the qualities which constitute the truly great prince. He had made himself so much beloved in Syria, during the little time he resided there, that never did the people express more affection for any of their native sovereigns, than for the person of this foreign prince.

When Orodes had a little recovered the dejection, into which the death of his dear son Pacorus had thrown him, he found himself extremely embarrassed about the choice of his successor out of his other children. He had thirty by different women, each of whom solicited him in favour of her own, and made use of all the ascendency she had over a spirit impaired by age and affliction. At last he determined however to follow the order of birth, and nominated Phraates. *
Phraates, the eldest and most vicious of them all. He had scarce taken possession of the throne, when he caused all his brothers, whom his father had by the daughter of Antiochus Eusebes, king of Syria, to be murdered, and that only because their mother was of a better family than his, and they had more merit than himself. The father, who was still alive, not being able to avoid professing extreme displeasure upon that occasion, that unnatural son ordered him also to be put to death. He treated the rest of his brothers in the same manner, and did not spare his own son, from the apprehension that the people would set him upon the throne in his stead. It was this prince, so cruel in regard to all his own family, that treated Hyrcanus, king of the Jews, with peculiar favour and clemency.

ARTICLE III.

Abridgment of the history of the kings of Cappadocia, from the foundation of that kingdom to the time when it became a province of the Roman empire.

I have spoke in several parts of this history of the kings of Cappadocia, according as I had occasion, but without mentioning either their beginning or succession. I shall here unite in one point of view all that relates to that kingdom.

Cappadocia is a great country (a) of Asia minor. The Persians, under whom it was at first, had divided it into two parts, and established two satrapies or governments in it. The Macedonians, into whose possession it fell, suffered those two governments to be changed into kingdoms. The one extended towards mount Taurus, and was properly called Cappadocia, or Cappadocia major, the other towards Pontus, and was called Cappadocia Pontica, or Cappadocia minor; they were at length united into one kingdom.

Strabo

(a) Strabo, l. xii. p. 535, 534.
Strabo says, that Ariarathes was the first king of Cappadocia, but does not mention at what time he began to reign. It is probable, that it was about the time Philip, father of Alexander the Great, began to reign in Macedonia, and Ochus in Persia; admitting that the kingdom of Cappadocia continued three hundred threescore and sixteen years, before it was reduced into a province of the Roman empire under Tiberius.

It was governed at first by a long succession of kings named Ariarathes, then by kings called Ariobarzanes, who did not exceed the third generation; and at length by the last, Archelaus. According to Diodorus Siculus, there were many kings of Cappadocia before Ariarathes; but as their history is almost entirely unknown, I shall make no mention of it in this place.

Ariarathes I. He reigned jointly with his brother Holophernes, for whom he had a particular affection.

Having joined the Persians in the expedition against Egypt, he acquired great glory, and returned home laden with honours by king Ochus.

Ariarathes II. son of the former, (b) had lived at peace in his dominions, during the wars of Alexander the Great, who, out of impatience to come to blows with Darius, was unwilling to be delayed for the conquest of Cappadocia, and had contented himself with some instances of submission.

After that prince's death, Cappadocia, in the partition made of the provinces of his empire by his generals, fell to Eumenes. Perdiccas, to put him into possession of it, conducted him thither at the head of a powerful army. Ariarathes on his side prepared for a vigorous defence. He had thirty thousand foot, and a numerous cavalry. They came to a battle. Ariarathes was defeated and taken prisoner. Perdiccas caused him, with his principal officers, to be crucified, and put Eumenes into possession of his dominions.

Ari-

(b) Plut. in Eumcn. p. 548: Diod. l. xviii. p. 599.
ALEXANDER'S SUCCESSORS. 65

Ariarathes III. after the death of his father, escaped into Armenia.

As soon as he was apprized of the death of Perdiccas and Eumenes, and the employment the other wars gave Antigonus and Seleucus, he entered Cappadocia with troops, lent him by Ardoates, king of Armenia. He defeated Amyntas, general of the Macedonians, drove him out of the country, and re-ascended the throne of his ancestors.

Ariamnes, his eldest son, succeeded him. He entered into an alliance with Antiochus Theos, king of Syria, and married his eldest son to Stratonice, the daughter of the same Antiochus. He had so great an affection for this son, that he made him his colleague in the kingdom.

Ariarathes IV. having reigned alone after the death of his father, left his dominions, when he died, to his son of the same name with himself, who was at that time very young.

Ariarathes V. He married Antiochis, daughter of Antiochus the Great, an artificial princess, who finding herself barren, had recourse to imposture. She deceived her husband, and made him believe that she had two sons, one of whom was called Ariarathes, and the other Holophernes. Her barrenness ceasing some time after, she had two daughters, and then one son, who was named Mithridates. She confessed the fraud to her husband, and sent one of the supposed children to be brought up at Rome, with a small train, and the other into Ionia. The true son took the name of Ariarathes, and was educated after the manner of the Greeks.

Ariarathes V. supplied his father-in-law, Antiochus king of Syria, with troops, in the war which he undertook against the Romans. Antiochus having been defeated, Ariarathes sent (c) ambassadors to Rome, to ask the senate’s pardon, for having been obliged to declare against the Romans in favour of his father.

(c) Liv. i. xxxvii. n. 40. l. xxxviii. n. 37, & 39.

He is called so by Polybius, and Orophernes by Diodorus Siculus.
father-in-law. This was granted him, but not till after he had been condemned to pay, by way of expiation of his fault, two hundred talents, that is to say, two hundred thousand crowns. The senate afterwards abated him half that sum, at the request of Eumenes king of Pergamus, who had lately married his daughter.

Ariarathes afterwards entered into an alliance with his son-in-law Eumenes, against Pharnaces king of Pontus. The Romans, who had rendered themselves arbiters of the kings of the East, sent ambassadors to transact a treaty between those three princes: But Pharnaces rejected their mediation. However, two years after, he was obliged to treat with Eumenes and Ariarathes upon conditions sufficiently hard.

The latter had a son of his own name, who loved him in the most tender manner, which occasioned his being surnamed Philopator, and for whom he had no less affection. He desired to give him the proofs of it, in resigning the kingdom to him, and placing him upon the throne during his life. The son, who had all possible affection and respect for a father that so well deserved both, could not resolve to accept an offer so advantageous in the vulgar opinion of men, but a mortal wound to so good a heart as his; and represented to his father, that he was not one of those who could consent to reign during the life of him to whom he owed his being. Such examples of moderation, generosity, disinterestedness, and sincere affection for a father, are the more extraordinary, and were the more admired, as in the times of which we are now relating the history, inordinate ambition respected nothing, and boldly violated the most sacred ties of nature and religion.

Ariarathes VI. surnamed Philopator, reigned after his father's death, and was an excellent prince. As soon (d) as he ascended the throne, he sent an embassy to Rome, to renew the alliance his father had contracted with the Romans, which he found no diffidifficulty to obtain. He applied himself very closely to the study of philosophy, from whence Cappadocia, which, till then, had been unknown to the Greeks, became the residence of many learned men.

(d) Diod. in Eclog. I. xxxi. p. 365.

Demetrius, king of Syria, had a sister, whom Ariarathes refused to espouse, lest that alliance should give offence to the Romans. That refusal extremely prejudiced Demetrius against the king of Cappadocia. He soon found an occasion to be revenged, by supplying Holophernes with troops, who pretended himself the brother of (e) Ariarathes, expelled him from the throne, and after that violence reigned tyrannically. He put many to death, confiscated the estates of the greatest lords, and even plundered a temple of Jupiter, which had been reverenced by the people from time immemorial, and had never suffered such a violence before. Apprehending a revolution, which his cruelty gave him reason to expect, he deposited * four hundred talents with the inhabitants of Priene, a city of Ionia. Ariarathes had taken refuge at Rome, to implore aid of the Romans. The usurper sent his deputies thither also. The senate, according to the usual motives of their policy, decreed that the kingdom should be divided between the two brothers. Ariarathes found a more immediate and more effectual protector, in the person of Attalus king of Pergamus, who signalized the beginning of his reign by re-establishing this unfortunate prince upon the throne of his ancestors. Ariarathes, to revenge himself on the usurper, was for obliging the inhabitants of Priene to deliver into his hands the four hundred talents Holophernes had left with them. They opposed that demand, with pleading the inviolable faith of deposits, which would not admit their giving up that sum to any one whatsoever, during the life of the person who had confided it to their keeping. Ariarathes had no regard to so just a representation, and laid waste their lands without mercy, notwithstanding (e) Diod. in Excerpt. p. 334; & 335.

* Four hundred talents.
standing which, so considerable a loss did not induce them to violate the fidelity they thought themselves obliged to observe in regard to him, who had confided that deposit with them.

Holophernes had (f) retired to Antioch, where he joined in a conspiracy with the inhabitants of that city against Demetrius his benefactor, whose place he had conceived hopes of supplying. The conspiracy was discovered, and Holophernes imprisoned. Demetrius would have put him to death directly, if he had not judged it more advisable to preserve him, in order to make use of him afterwards in the pretensions he had upon Cappadocia, and the design he had formed of dethroning and destroying Ariarathes: But he was prevented by the plot contrived against him by the three kings of Egypt, Pergamus, and Cappadocia, who set Alexander Bala upon the throne in his stead.

Ariarathes aided the Romans against Aristonius, who (g) had possessed himself of the kingdom of Pergamus, and perished in that war.

He left six children, whom he had by Laodice. The Romans, in gratitude for the father's services, added Lycaonia and Cilicia to their dominions. Laodice, who was regent during the minority of those six princes, apprehending the loss of her authority when they should be at age to reign, poisoned five of them the same year their father died. She had treated the sixth in the same manner, if the vigilance of relations had not removed him from the fury of that unnatural mother. The people set him upon the throne, after having destroyed that cruel murderer of her children.

Ariarathes VII. (b) He married another Laodice, sister of Mithridates Eupator, and had two sons by her, Ariarathes VIII. and Ariarathes IX. His brother-in-law caused him to be murdered by Gordius, one of his subjects. Laodice afterwards married

A M. 3913.
Ant. J. C. 91.

(g) Ibid. I. xxxvii. c. 1.

(g) Ibid. I. xxxvii. c. 1.

(b) Ibid. I. xxxviii. c. 2.
Nicomedes king of Bithynia, who immediately took possession of Cappadocia. Mithridates sent an army thither, drove out the garrisons of Nicomedes, and restored the kingdom to his nephew, the son of the same Ariarathes, whom he had caused to be assassinated.

Ariarathes VIII. had scarce ascended the throne, when Mithridates pressed him to recall Gordius from banishment, with design to rid himself of the son by the same assassin who had killed the father. That young prince shuddered at the proposal, and raised an army to oppose the violence of his uncle. Mithridates being unwilling to decide his measures by the hazard of a battle, chose rather to draw Ariarathes to a conference, in which he assassinated him with a dagger concealed for that purpose in the view of the two armies. He set his own son of only eight years old in his place, caused him to be called Ariarathes, and gave him Gordius for his governor (i). The Cappadocians, not being able to bear the vexations of the lieutenants of Mithridates, rose in arms, called in Ariarathes, the late king's brother, from Asia, and placed him upon the throne.

Ariarathes IX. Soon after his return, Mithridates attacked, overthrew, and expelled him the kingdom. That young prince's grief brought a distemper on him, of which he died soon after. Mithridates had re-established his son upon the throne.

Nicomedes, king of Bithynia, apprehending that Mithridates, being in possession of Cappadocia, might fall upon his dominions, set up an infant of eight years old, to whom he also gave the name of Ariarathes, and sent deputies to the Romans to demand the kingdom of his father in his name. Queen Laodice his wife went expressly to Rome to support the imposture, and to testify, that she had three sons by Ariarathes VII. of whom this, which she produced, was the last. Mithridates, on his side, ventured to have assurances made by Gordius, that this fon, whom he had placed upon the throne, was the son of that Ariarathes who had been killed in the war against Ariftonicus. What times were these! what a series is here of frauds and impostures! The Roman people saw through them; and, not to support them on either side, decreed that Mithridates should renounce Cappadocia, which for the future should enjoy its liberty, and govern itself as it thought proper. But the Cappadocians sent to Rome to declare that liberty was insupportable to them, and to demand a king. We may justly be astonished at the taste of a people, who could prefer slavery to liberty! but there are capricious and corrupt nations, to which the monarchical is better adapted than the republican government; and there are few people, who are wise enough to make a moderate use of perfect and entire liberty. The Cappadocians elected, or rather received from the Romans, Ariobarzanes for their king, whose family was extinct at the third generation.

(i) Justin. I. xxxviii. c. 2.

Ariobarzanes I. (a) This new prince did not enjoy his dignity in peace. Mithraas and Bagoas, generals of Tigranes, drove him out of Cappadocia, and re-instated Ariarathes, son of Mithridates. The Romans caused Ariobarzanes to be re-instituted. He was expelled some time after by an army sent by Mithridates into Cappadocia in favour of his son. Sylla, having obtained great advantages over Mithridates, compelled him to abandon Cappadocia. Some time after, at the instigation of that prince, Tigranes invaded that kingdom, and carried off three hundred thousand men, to whom he gave lands in Armenia. Ariobarzanes, who had escaped to Rome before the invasion, was not restored till Pompey had put an end to the war with Mithridates.

Ariobarzanes II. Pompey had considerably enlarged the dominions of Ariobarzanes, when he replaced him upon the throne of Cappadocia. His son son succeeded to all that great inheritance, but did not keep it long. He was killed some time before Cicero went to command in Cilicia. The prince who reigned at that time was Ariobarzanes III. grandson of Ariobarzanes I.

(a) Appian, in Mithrid. p. 176, &c. Justin. i. xxxviii. c. 3. Plut. in Sylla.

Ariobarzanes III. Cicero (b), upon quitting Rome, had received orders to favour and protect Ariobarzanes with all possible care, as a prince whose welfare was dear to the senate and people: A glorious testimonial, which had never before been granted to any king. Cicero punctually executed the order of the senate. When he arrived in Cilicia, Ariobarzanes was menaced with being killed, as his father had been. A conspiracy was on foot against him, in favour of his brother Ariarathes. The latter declared to Cicero, that he had no part in that plot; that indeed he had been earnestly solicited to accept the kingdom, but that he had always been infinitely averse to such thoughts, during the life of his brother, who had no issue. Cicero employed the authority of his office, and all the credit his high reputation gave him, to dispel the storm with which the king was threatened. His * endeavours were successful; he saved the king's life and crown by his constancy, and a generous disinterestedness, which rendered him inaccessible to all the attempts that were made to corrupt his integrity, and to make him change sides. The greatest danger came from the high-priest of Comana. There were two principal cities of that name, the one in Cappadocia, and the other in the kingdom of Pontus (c). They were consecrated to Bellona, and observed almost the same ceremonies in the worship of that goddess. The one was formed upon the model of the other; that of Pontus upon that of Cappadocia. It is of the latter we

---

(b) Cic. Epist. 2 and 4. 1. xv. ad Famil. & Epist. 20. 1. v. ad Attic.

(c) Strabo. l. xii. p. 535, & 557.

The temple of that god was endowed with great estates, and served by a vast number of persons, under the authority of a pontiff, a man of great credit, and so considerable, that only the king was his superior: He was generally of the blood royal. His dignity was for life. Strabo says, that in his time there were above six thousand persons consecrated to the service of this temple. From hence the high-priest was so powerful; and * in the time of which we speak, might have occasioned a very dangerous war, and involved Ariobarzanes in great difficulties, had he thought proper to defend himself by force of arms, as it was believed he would; for he had troops, both horse and foot, ready to take the field, with great funds to pay and subsist them. But Cicero, by his prudence, prevailed upon him to retire out of the kingdom, and to leave Ariobarzanes in the peaceable possession of it.

During the civil war between Cæsar and Pompey, Ariobarzanes marched with some troops to the latter, who were present at the battle of Pharsalia. This, no doubt, was the reason that Cæsar laid Ariobarzanes under contribution. It is certain he exacted very considerable sums of money from him (d); for that prince represented to him, that it would be impossible for him to pay them, if Pharnaces continued to plunder Cappadocia. Cæsar was then in Egypt, from whence he set out to reduce Pharnaces to reason. He passed through Cappadocia, and made such regulations there, as imply that Ariobarzanes and his brother were in no very good understanding, and entirely subjected the latter to the authority of the former. After Cæsar had conquered Pharnaces, (d) Cæsar de Bell. Civ. I. iii.

Hift. de Bell. Alex.

* Cum magnum bellum in Cappadocia concitaretur, si facerdos armis f(ere (quod facturus putabatur) defenderet, adolefcentes & equitatu & peditatu & pecunia paratus, & toto, iis qui novari aliquid volebant, perfeci ut e regno ille diceret; rexque fine tumultu ac fine armis, omni auctoritate aule communita, regnum cum dignitate obtineret. Cic. Epift. 4. lib. xv. ad Famil.
ces (e), he gave part of Cilicia and Armenia to Ariobarzanes.

This good treatment (f) gave the murderers of Cæsar reason to believe, that the king of Cappadocia would not favour their party. He did not openly declare against them; but he refused to enter into their alliance. This conduct gave them a just diffidence of him, so that Cassius thought it incumbent upon him not to spare him. He attacked him, and having taken him prisoner, put him to death.

Ariarathes X. By the death of Arioabarzanes, the kingdom of Cappadocia remained to his brother Ariarathes. The possession of it was disputed with him by Sisinnia, the eldest son of Glaphyra, wife of Archelaus, high-priest of Bellona, at Comana in Cappadocia. This Archelaus was the grandson of Archelaus, a Cappadocian by nation, and general of an army in Greece for Mithridates against Sylla. He abandoned the party of Mithridates in the second war, as we shall relate in the twenty-second book (g), and joined the Romans. He left one son, named also Archelaus, who married Berecnie, queen of Egypt, and was killed six months after in a battle.
He obtained a very honourable dignity of Pompey, which was the high-priesthood of Comana in Cappa-docia. His son Archelaus possessed it after him. He married Glaphyra, a lady of extraordinary beauty, and had two sons by her, Sisinnia and Archelaus.
(b) The first disputed the kingdom of Cappadocia with Ariarathes, who possessed it. Mark Antony was the judge of this difference, and determined it in favour of Sisinnia. What became of him is not known; history only tells us, that Ariarathes re-ascended the throne. Five or six years after, Mark Anthony expelled him (i), and set Archelaus, the second son of Glaphyra, upon the throne.

Archelaus.

(e) Diod. l. xliii. p. 183.  (f) Diod. l. xlvii.  (g) Strab.
THE HISTORY OF

A. M. Archelaus. (k) That prince became very powerful. He expressed his gratitude to Mark Anthony, by joining him with good troops at the battle of Actium. He was fortunate, notwithstanding that conduct, to escape the resentment of Augustus. He was suffered to keep possession of Cappadocia, and was almost the only one treated with so much favour.

A. M. He assisted Tiberius (l) to re-establish Tigranes in Armenia, and obtained of Augustus, Armenia minor, and a great part of Cilicia. Tiberius rendered him great services with Augustus, especially when his subjects brought accusations against him before that prince. He pleaded his cause himself, and was the occasion of his gaining it. Archelaus fixed his residence in the island of Eleusis near the coast of Cilicia, and having married Pythodoris, the widow of Polemon king of Pontus, he considerably augmented his power. For as the sons of Polemon were infants at that time, he had undoubtedly the administration of their kingdom jointly with their mother.

His reign was very long and happy: (m) But his latter years were unfortunate, in effect of Tiberius’s revenge. That prince, who saw with pain, that Caius and Lucius, the sons of Agrippa, grandsons of Augustus, and his sons by adoption, were raised by degrees above him; * to avoid giving umbrage to the two young Caesars, and to spare himself the mortification of being witness to their aggrandisement, demanded and obtained permission to retire to Rhodes, under pretext that he had occasion to withdraw from business and the hurry of Rome for the re-establishment of his health. His retreat was considered as a real banishment, and people began to neglect him as

* Ne fulgor fuus orientium juventum obsistaret iniuris, diffimulata causa consili sui, commenatum ab socero atque eodem vitrico acquisi-fecendi a continuatione laborum petiti. Paterc. l. ii. c. 99.
as a person in disgrace, and did not believe it safe to appear his friends. * During his stay at Rhodes, king Archelaus, who was not very remote from thence, residing generally at Eleusis, paid him no honours, forgetting the great obligations he had to him. It was not, says Tacitus, out of pride or haughtiness, but by the advice of Augustus's principal friends, who believed the amity of Tiberius dangerous at that time. On the contrary, when young Caius Cæsar, appointed governor of the East, was sent into Armenia by Augustus, to appease the troubles of that country, Archelaus, who looked upon him as the future successor to the empire, paid him all kind of honours, and distinguished himself by the zeal with which he paid his court to him. Politicians are often mistaken in their conjectures, for want of a clear insight into futurity. It had been more consistent with prudence and wisdom in Archelaus to have observed such a conduct as had been agreeable to each of the princes, who might both arrive at the empire. Something of this nature is observed of Pomponius Atticus, who during the divisions, with which the republic was torn at different times, always knew how to render himself agreeable to both parties.

Tiberius never forgot the injurious preference that had been given to his rival, which was the more offensive to him, as it argued an ungrateful disposition in Archelaus. He made him highly sensible of this when he became master. Archelaus was cited to Rome, A. M. 4052. Ant. J. C. 2.

* Rex Archelaus quinquagesimum annum Cappadocia potiebatur, invitus Tiberio, quod eum Rhodi agentem nullo officio coluisse. Nec id Archelaus per superbia omiferat, sed ab intimis Augusti monitis; quia florenti Caio Cæsare, nifi quod ad res Orientis, intuta Tiberii amicitia credebatur. Tacit. Annal. i. ii. c. 42.

† Archelas was but six leagues distant from Rhodes. Strab. l. xiv. p. 651.

† Hoc quale sit, facilius existimabit is, qui judicare quanta sit sapientia, eorum retinere usum benevolentiamque inter quos maximarum rerum non solum amaritatio, sed obrectatio tanta intercedebat, quantum fuit incidere necesse inter Cæsarem atque Antonium, cum fecerit uterque principem non solum urbibus Romanis sed orbis terrarum eiffæ superet. Corn. Nep. in Attic. c. xx.
Rome, as having endeavoured to excite troubles in the province. Livia wrote to him, and without diffi-embling the emperor's anger, gave him hopes of pardon, provided he came in person to demand it. This was a snare laid for drawing him out of his kingdom. The king of Cappadocia either did not perceive it, or dared not act as if he did. He set out for Rome, was very ill received by Tiberius, and saw himself proceeded against as a criminal. Dion assures us, that Archelaus, depressed with age, was generally believed to have loft his reason; but that in reality he was perfectly in his senses, and counterfeited the madman, because he saw no other means of saving his life. The senate passed no sentence against him; but age, the gout, and, more than those, the indignity of the treatment he was made to suffer, soon occasioned his death. He had reigned two-and-fifty years. After his death Cappadocia was reduced into a province of the Roman empire.

This kingdom was very powerful. The revenues of Cappadocia were so considerable when Archelaus died, that Tiberius thought himself able, from his new acquisition, to abate the half of a tax he had caused to be levied. He even gave that province some relief, and would not exact from it all the duties it had paid the last king.

The kings of Cappadocia generally resided at Mazaca (n), a city situate upon the mountain Argea, and was governed by the laws of Charondas. This city was built upon the river Melas, which empties itself into the Euphrates. A king of Cappadocia, whom Strabo only calls Ariarathes, without mentioning the time when he lived, having filled up the mouths

(n) Strab. I. xii. p. 537, 539.

* Ille ignarus dolui, vel, si intelligere videretur, vim metueas, in urbein properit: exceptuque immitti a principe, & mox accusatus senatu; non ob crimina, quae fingeabatur, sed angore, simul seffius senio, & quia regibus aqua, nedum infima, insolita sunt, finem viti sponte an fato implevit. Tacit. Annal. I. ii. c. 42.

† This Charondas was a celebrated legislator of Graecia major, of whom mention has been made.
mouths of this river, it overflowed all the neighbouring country; after which he caused small islands to be made in it, after the manner of the Cyclades, where he passed part of his life in puerile diversions. The river broke the dams of its mouths, and the waters returned into their channel. The Euphrates having received them, overflowed, and did incredible damages in Cappadocia. The Galatians, who inhabited Phrygia, suffered also great losses by that torrent, for which they insisted upon being made amends. They demanded three hundred talents of the king of Cappadocia, and made the Romans their judges.

Cappadocia abounded with horses, asses (o), and mules. It was from thence the horses were brought so particularly allotted for the use of the emperors, that the consuls themselves were forbid to have any of them. It furnished also great numbers of * slaves and false witnesses. The Cappadocians were reported to accustom themselves to the bearing of torments from their infancy, and to put one another to the question by the rack and other methods of torture, in order to inure themselves against the pains their false witness might one day expose them to suffer. This people exceeded the Greek nation in perjury (p), though the latter had carried that vice to a great height, if we may believe Cicero, who ascribes to them the having made this manner of speaking common amongst them; Lend me your evidence (q), and I'll pay you with mine.

Cappadocia, generally speaking, was far from being a country of great geniuses and learned men. It has produced however some very celebrated authors. Strabo and Pausanias are of that number. It was believed especially, that the Cappadocians were very unfit for the profession of orators; and it became (o) Boch. Phal. l. iii. c. 11. Schol. Persii. (p) Cic. pro Flac. n. 9, 10. (q) Da mihi testimonia muniam.

* Mancipius locuples eget aest Cappadonum rex. Horat, came a proverb, that a * rhetorician of that country was as hard to be found as a white raven or a flying tortoise. S. Basil and S. Gregory Nazianzen are exceptions to that rule.

* Θαύμα τον λευκὸν κοτόπασ οἰκίσας χελώνας
Εγὼ δὲ οὐκ οἶκισέν πτέραν Καππαδοκίαν.
BOOK THE TWENTY-FIRST.

THE HISTORY OF SYRACUSE.

ARTICLE I.

Sect. I. Hiero the Second chosen captain-general by the Syracusans, and soon after appointed king. He makes an alliance with the Romans in the beginning of the first Punick war.

Hiero II. was descended from the family of Gelon, who had formerly reigned in Syracuse. As his mother was of flavish extraction, his father Hierocles, according to the barbarous custom of those times, caused him to be exposed soon after his birth; believing that the infant dishonoured the nobility of his race. If Justin's fabulous account may be believed, the bees nourished him several days with their honey. The oracle declaring, that so singular an event was a certain presage of his future greatness, Hierocles caused him to be brought back to his house, and took all possible care of his education.

The child improved as much from the pains taken to form him, as could be expected. He distinguished himself early from all those of his years, by his address.

(a) Justin. I. xxiii. c. 4.
dressed in military exercises, and his courage in battle. He acquired the esteem of Pyrrhus, and received several rewards from his own hands. He was of a beautiful aspect, large stature, and robust complexion. In his conversation * he was humane and polite, in business just, and moderate in command; so that he wanted nothing royal except a throne.

(b) Discord having arose between the citizens of Syracuse and their troops, the latter, who were in the neighbourhood, raised Artemedorus and Hiero to the supreme command, which comprehended all authority civil and military. The latter was at that time thirty years old, but of a prudence and maturity, that promised a great king. Honoured with this command, by the help of some friends he entered the city, and having found means to bring over the adverse party, who were intent upon nothing but raising disorders, he behaved with so much wisdom and greatness of mind, that the Syracusans, though highly dissatisfied with the liberty assumed by the soldiers of making such an election without any right, were however unanimous in conferring upon him the title and power of supreme commander.

From his first measures it was easy to judge, that the new magistrate aspired at something more than that office. In effect, observing that the troops no sooner quitted the city, than Syracuse was involved in new troubles by seditious spirits and lovers of novelty, he perceived how important it was, in the absence of himself and the army, to have somebody upon whom he might rely for keeping the citizens within the bounds of their duty. Leptinus seemed very fit for this purpose, he had abundance of persons devoted to his interests, and was in very great credit with the people. Hiero attached him to himself for ever, by espousing his daughter, and by the same alliance secured the publick tranquillity, during the

(b) Polyb. 1. i. p. 8, 9.

the time he should be obliged to remove from Syracuse, and march at the head of the armies.

Another much bolder, though far less just, stroke of policy, established his security and repose. He had every thing to fear from the foreign soldiers, turbulent malignant men, void of respect for their commanders, and of affection for a state which they made no part, solely actuated by the desire of command and lucre, and always ready for a revolt; who having been bold enough to assume a right in the election of magistrates, which did not belong to them, were capable, upon the least discontent, of attempting any thing against himself. He easily comprehended, that he should never have the mastery over them, from their being too well united amongst themselves; that if he undertook to punish the most criminal, their chastisement would only provoke the rest; and that the only means to put an end to the troubles they occasioned, was utterly to exterminate the factious militia, whose licentiousness and rebellious disposition were only fit to corrupt others, and incline them to pernicious excesses. Deceived by a false zeal and blind love for the publick good, and sensibly affected also with the prospect of the dangers to which he was perpetually exposed, he thought it incumbent on him, for the safety of his country and security of his person, to proceed to a cruel and sad extremity, equally contrary to his character and justice, but which seemed necessary to him in the present conjuncture. He therefore took the field under the pretext of marching against the Mamertines. When he came within view of the enemy, he divided his army into two parts: On the one side he posted such of the soldiers as were Syracusans; on the other, those who were not so. He put himself at the head of the first, as if he intended an attack, and left the others exposed to the Mamertines.
who cut them in pieces: After which he returned quietly to the city with the Syracusan troops.

The army being thus purged of all who might excite disorders and sedition, he raised a sufficient number of new troops, and afterwards discharged the duties of his function in peace. The Mamertines, elate with their success, advancing into the country, he marched against them with the Syracusan troops, whom he had armed and disciplined well, and gave the battle in the plain of Myla. A great part of the enemies were left upon the place, and their generals made prisoners. At his return he was declared king by all the citizens of Syracuse, and afterwards by all the allies. This happened seven years after his being raised to the supreme authority.

It would be difficult to justify the manner in which he attained that eminence. Whether he put the foreign soldiers in motion himself, which seems probable enough; or only lent himself to their zeal, it was a criminal infidelity to his country, and the publick authority, to which his example gave a mortal wound. It is true, the irregularity of his entrance upon office was somewhat amended, by the consent which the people and the allies afterward gave to it. But can we suppose, in such a conjuncture, that their consent was perfectly free? As to his being elected king, there was nothing forced in that: If his secret ambition had any part in it, that fault was well atoned for, by his wise and disinterested conduct through the long duration of his reign and life.

The loss of the battle we have spoken of entirely disconcerted the affairs of the Mamertines. Some of them had recourse to the Carthaginians, to whom they surrendereed their citadel; others resolved to abandon the city to the Romans, and sent to desire their aid. Hence arose the first Punick war, as I have explained more at large elsewhere.

(d) Appius Claudius the consul put to sea, in order to aid the Mamertines. Not being able to pass the

(d) Frontin. Stratag. i. i. c. 4. * Vol. I. History of the Carthaginians.
the store of Messina, of which the Carthaginians had possesed themselves, he made a feint of abandoning that enterprize, and of returning towards Rome with all the troops he had on board his fleet. Upon this news the enemy, who blocked up Messina on the side next the sea, having retired, as if there had been no-thing farther to apprehend, Appius tacked about, and passed the store without danger.

(c) The Mamertines, between menaces and surprize, having driven the officer out of the citadel, who commanded in it for the Carthaginians, they called in Appius, and opened the gates of their city to him. The Carthaginians soon after formed the siege of it, and made a treaty of alliance with Hiero, who joined his troops to theirs. The Roman consul thought fit to venture a battle, and attacked the Syracusans first. The fight was rude. Hiero shewed all possible courage, but could not resist the valour of the Romans, and was obliged to give way, and retire to Syracuse. Claudius, having obtained a like victory over the Carthaginians, saw himself master of the field, advanced to the walls of Syracuse, and even designed to have besieged it.

(f) When the news of Appius's good success arrived at Rome, it occasioned great joy. In order to make the most of it, it was thought proper to use new efforts. The two consuls lately elected, Manius Otacilius and Manius Valerius, were ordered into Sicily. Upon their arrival, several of the Carthaginian and Syracusan cities surrendered at discretion.

The consternation of Sicily, joined to the number and force of the Roman legions, made Hiero conceive what event this new war was likely to have. That prince was sensible, that he might rely upon a more faithful and constant amity on the side of the Romans. He knew, that the Carthaginians had not renounced the design they had ancintly formed, of possesing themselves of all Sicily; and if they made

A. M. 374·
Ant. J. C. 263·

(e) Polyb, l. i. p. 10, 11.
(f) Ibid. p. 15, 16.
themselves masters of Messina, he rightly judged his power would be very insecure in the neighbourhood of such dangerous and formidable enemies. He saw no other expedient for the preservation of his kingdom, than to leave the Carthaginians engaged with the Romans; well assured that the war would be long and obstinate between these two republicks equal in their forces, and that as long as they should be at blows, he should have no reason to apprehend being distressed either by the one or the other. He therefore sent ambassadors to the consuls to treat of peace and alliance. They were far from refusing those offers. They were too much afraid, that the Carthaginians, masters at sea, might cut off all passage for provisions; which fear was the better founded, as the troops, who had first passed the strait, had suffered extremely by famine. An alliance with Hiero secured the legions in that respect, and was immediately concluded. The conditions were, that the king should restore to the Romans, without ransom, all the prisoners he had taken from them, and pay them an hundred * talents in money.

From thenceforth Hiero saw no war in his dominions, nor had any other share in it, than of sending supplies to the Romans upon occasion. In other respects he reigned as a king who had no view nor ambition but the esteem and love of his people. No prince was ever more successful in that point, nor longer enjoyed the fruits of his wisdom and prudence. During more than fifty years that he lived after being elected king, whilst all things were in flames around him, occasioned by the cruel wars which the two most potent states of the world made against each other, he was so prudent and happy to be no more than a spectator of them, and only to hear the noise of those arms, which shook all the neighbouring regions; himself and his people retained a profound peace.

(g) The Romans perceived on more than one occasion,

(g) Polyb. i. p. 15. * An hundred thousand crowns.
OF SYRACUSE.
ceasion, during the first Punick war, and especially at the siege of Agrigentum, with which it was in a manner opened, the importance of their alliance with Hiero, who abundantly supplied them with provisions at times, when the Roman army, without his aid, had been exposed to excessive famine.

The interval between the end of the first Punick war, and the commencement of the second, which was about five-and-twenty years, was a time of peace and tranquility to Hiero, in which the actions of that prince are little spoken of.

(b) Polybius only informs us, that the Carthaginians, in the unhappy war they were obliged to support against the strangers or mercenaries, which was called the African war, finding themselves extremely prest, had recourse to their allies, and especially to king Hiero, who granted them all they asked of him.
That prince conceived, that to support himself in Sicily, it was necessary that the Carthaginians should overcome in this war; left the strangers, who had already obtained many advantages over the Carthaginians, in case of entire success, should find no farther obstacles to their projects, and should form designs of bringing their victorious arms into Sicily. Perhaps also, as he was an excellent politician, he thought it incumbent on him to be upon his guard against the too great power of the Romans, who would become absolute masters, if the Carthaginians should be entirely ruined in the war against the revolutionists.

Hiero's sole application during this long interval of peace, was to make his subjects happy, and to redress the evils, which the unjust government of Agathocles, who preceded him some years, and the intestine divisions consequent of them, had occasioned: An employment worthy of a king. There was a levity and inconstancy in the character of the Syrcusans, which often inclined them to excessive and violent resolutions; but at bottom they were humane and equitable, and no enemies to a just and reason-
A. M. 3763.
Ant. J. C. 241.

G 3

(b) Polyb. 1. i. p. 84.
able obedience. The proof of which is, that when they were governed with wisdom and moderation, as by Timoleon, they respected the authority of the laws and magistrates, and obeyed them with joy.

Hiero was no sooner entered upon office, and had the supreme authority confided to him, than he shewed his detestation for the wretched policy of the tyrants; who, considering the citizens as their enemies, had no other thoughts than to weaken and intimidate them, and reposed their whole confidence in the foreign soldiers, by whom they were perpetually surrounded.
He began by putting arms into the hands of the citizens, formed them with care in the exercises of war, and employed them in preference to all others.

Sect. II. Hiero's pacifick reign. He particularly favours agriculture. He applies the abilities of Archimedes his relation to the service of the publick, and causes him to make an infinite number of machines for the defence of a besieged place. He dies very old, and much regretted by the people.

WHEN Hiero attained the sovereign authority, his great application was to convince his subjects, less by his words than his actions, that he was infinitely remote from intending any thing to the prejudice of their fortunes or liberty. He was not intent upon being feared, but upon being loved.
He looked upon himself less as their master, than as their protector and father. Before his reign the state had been divided by two factions, that of the citizens, and that of the soldiers; whose differences, supported on both sides with great animosity, had occasioned infinite misfortunes. He used his utmost endeavours to extinguish all remains of this division, and to eradicate from their minds all seeds of discord and misderstanding. He seems to have succeeded wonderfully in that respect, as during a reign of more than fifty fifty years, no sedition or revolt disturbed the tranquility of Syracuse.

What contributed most, without doubt, to this happy calm, was the particular care taken by Hiero, to keep his subjects employed; to banish luxury and idlenesfs, the parents of all vices, the source of all seditions, from his dominions; to support and improve the natural fertility of his country; and to place agriculture in honour, which he looked upon as the certain means to render his people happy, and to diffuse abundance throughout his kingdom. The cultivation of lands indeed, besides employing an infinity of hands, which would otherwise remain idle and unprofitable, draws into a country, by the exportation of grain, the riches of the neighbouring nations, and turns their current into the houses of the people, by a commerce renewing every year the deserved fruit of their labour and industry. This is, and we cannot repeat it too often, what ought to be the peculiar attention of a wise government, as one of the most essential parts of wise and salutary policy, though unhappily too much neglected.

Hiero applied himself entirely to this end: He did not think it unworthy of the sovereignty to study and be skilful in all the rules of agriculture. (i) He even gave himself the trouble to compose books upon that subject, of which we ought much to regret the loss. But he considered that object of his enquiries in a manner still more worthy of a king. The principal riches of the state, and the most certain fund of the prince's revenue consisted in corn. He therefore believed it of the highest consequence, and what demanded his utmost care and application, to establish good order in that traffick, to render the condition of the husbandman, of whom the greatest part of the people were composed, safe and happy; to ascertain the prince's dues, whose principal revenue arose from them; to obviate such disorders as might get ground, to the prejudice of his his institutions; and to prevent the unjust vexations, which endeavours might possibly be used to obtrude in the sequel. To answer all these purposes, Hiero made regulations so wise, reasonable, equitable, and at the same time conformable to the people's and prince's interests, that they became in a manner the fundamental laws of the country, and were always observed as sacred and inviolable, not only in his reign, but in all succeeding times. When the Romans had subjeeted the city and dominions of Syracuse, they imposed no new tributes, and decreed, * that all things should be disposed according to the laws of Hiero; in order that the Syracusans, in changing their masters, might have the consolation not to change their laws; and see themselves in some measure still governed by a prince, whose name alone was always dear to them, and rendered those laws exceedingly venerable.

(i) Polyb. l. xviii. c. 3.

I have observed, that in Sicily the prince's principal revenue consisted in corn; the tenth being paid him. It was therefore his interest that the country should be well cultivated, that estimates should be made of the value of the lands, and that they should produce abundantly, as his revenue augmented in proportion to their fertility. The collectors of this tenth for the prince, which was paid in kind and not in money, were called Decumani, that is to say, farmers of the tenths. Hiero, in the regulations he made upon this head, did not neglect his own interests, which argues him a wise prince, and good economist. He knew very well, there was reason to apprehend, that the country-people, who consider the most legal and moderate imposts as intolerable burdens, might be tempted to defraud the prince of his dues. To spare them this temptation, he took such †

* Decumas lege Hieronica semper vendendas censuerunt, ut iis jucundior esset muneriis illius functioni, si ejus regis, qui Siculis carissimus fuit, non solum instituta, commutato imperio, verum etiam nomen remaneret. Cic. Orat. in Ver. de frum. n. 15.
† Hieronica lex omnibus custodibus subjectum aratorem decumano tradit, ut neque in segetibus, neque in arcis, neque in hor-
just and exact precautions, that whether the corn were in the ear, on the floor to be threshed, laid up in barns, or laden for carriage, it was not possible for the husbandman to secrete any part of it, or to defraud the collector of a single grain, without exposing himself to a severe penalty. But he adds also, that Hiero had taken the same precautions against the avidity of the collectors, to whom it was equally impossible to extort any thing from the husbandmen beyond the tenth. Hiero seems to have been very much against the husbandman’s quitting his home upon any pretext whatsoever. Cicero says accordingly, inveighing against Verres, who gave them great trouble, by frequent and painful journeys: it is very hard and afflicting to the poor husbandmen, to be brought from their country to the city, from their plow to the bar, and the care of tilling their lands to that of prosecuting law-suits. (k) Miserum atque iniquum ex agro homines traduci in forum, ab aratro ad subfellia, ab usu rerum rusticarum ad insolitam litem atque judicium. And besides, can they flatter themselves, let their cause be ever so just, that they shall carry it to the prejudice of the collectors? Judicio ut arator decumanum prosequatur!

Can there be any thing more to a king’s praise than what we have now said? Hiero might undertake wars, for he did not want valour, gain battles, make conquests, and extend the bounds of his dominions, and upon these accounts might pass for a hero, in the sense of the generality of men. But with how many taxes must he have charged his people! How many husbandmen must he have torn from their lands! How much blood would the gaining those victories have cost him! And of what emolument would they have been to the state! Hiero, who knew wherein true glory consists, placed his in governing his people with with wisdom, and in making them happy. Instead of conquering new countries by the force of arms, he endeavoured to multiply his own in a manner by the cultivation of lands, by rendering them more fertile than they were, and in actually multiplying his people, wherein the true force and riches of a state consists; and which can never fail to happen, when the people of a country reap a seasonable advantage from their labour.

(1) It was in the second Punick war, that Hiero gave distinguished proofs of his attachment to the Romans. As soon as he received advice of Hannibal's arrival in Italy, he went with his fleet well equipped to meet Tiberius Sempronius, who was arrived at Messina, to offer that consul his services, and to assure him, that advanced in age as he was, he would shew the same zeal for the Roman people, as he had formerly done in his youth, in the first war against the Carthaginians. He took upon him to supply the consul's legions, and the troops of the allies, with corn and clothes at his own expense. Upon the news received the same instant, of the advantage gained by the Roman over the Carthaginian fleet, the consul thanked the king for his advantageous offers, and made no use of them at that time.

(m) Hiero's inviolable fidelity for the Romans, which is very remarkable in his character, appears still more conspicuously after their defeat near the lake of Trasymene. They had already lost three battles against Hannibal, each more unfortunate and more bloody than the other. Hiero, in that mournful conjuncture, sent a fleet laden with provisions to the port of Ostia. The Syracusan ambassadors, upon their being introduced to the senate, told them, "That Hiero, their master, had been as sensibly afflicted on their last disgrace, as if he had suffered it in his own person. That though he well knew, that the grandeur of the Roman people was almost more".

(1) Liv. i. xxi. n. 50, 51.
(m) Ibid. i. xxii. n. 37, 38.
admirable in times of adversity, than after the most signal successes; he had sent them all the aid, that could be expected from a good and faithful ally, and earnestly desired the senate would not refuse to accept it. That they had particularly brought a victory of gold, that weighed three hundred pounds, which the king hoped they would vouchsafe to receive as a favourable augury, and a pledge of the vows which he made for their prosperity. That they had also three hundred thousand bushels of wheat, and two hundred thousand of barley; and that if the Roman people desired a greater quantity, Hiero would cause as much as they pleased to be transported to whatever places they should appoint. That he knew the Roman people employed none in their armies but citizens and allies; but that he had seen light-armed strangers in their camp. That he had therefore sent them a thousand archers and slingers, who might be opposed successfully to the Baleares and Moors of Hannibal's army.” They added to this aid a very salutary piece of counsel, which was, that the prætor, who should be sent to command in Sicily, might dispatch a fleet to Africa, in order to find the Carthaginians such employment in their own country, as might put it out of their power by that diversion to send any succours to Hannibal.

The senate answered the king’s ambassadors in very obliging and honourable terms, “That Hiero acted like a very generous prince, and a most faithful ally: That from the time he had contracted an alliance with the Romans, his detachment for them had been constant and unalterable; in fine, that in all times and places he had powerfully and magnificently supported them; That the people had a due sense of such generosity: That some cities of Italy had already presented the Roman people with gold, who, after having expressed their gratitude, had not thought fit to accept it: That the victory was too favourable an augury not to be received: That they would place her in the Capitol, that is to say, in the temple of the most high Jupiter, in order that she might establish there her fixed and lasting abode." All the corn and barley on board the ships, with the archers and slingers, were sent to the consuls.

Valerius Maximus * observes here, upon the noble and prudent liberality of Hiero; first in the generous design he forms, of presenting the Romans three hundred and twenty pounds weight of gold; then in the industrious precaution he uses, to prevent their refusal to accept it. He does not offer them that gold in specie; he knew the exceeding delicacy of the Roman people too well for that; but under the form of a victory, which they dared not refuse, upon account of the good omen it seemed to bring along with it.

It is extraordinary to see a prince, whose domini-zons were situate as Syracuse was in regard to Carthage, from which it had every thing to fear, at a time when Rome seemed near her ruin, continue unalter-rably faithful, and declare openly for her interests, notwithstanding all the dangers to which so daring a conduct exposed him. A more prudent politician, to speak the usual language, would perhaps have waited the event of a new action, and not have been so hafty to declare himself without necessity, and at his extreme peril. Such examples are the more estimable, for being rare and almost unparalleled.

I do not know, however, whether, even in good policy, Hiero ought not to have acted as he did.
It would have been the greatest of all misfortunes for Syracuse, had the Carthaginians entirely ruined, or even weakened the Romans too much. That city would have immediately felt all the weight of Carthage;

* Trecenta millia modiunm tri-tici, & ducenta millia hordei, au-rique ducent&quadragina pondo urbis nostrar munet milt. Neque ignarus verecundia: majorum noftrorum, quod nollet accipere, in habitum id victoriae formavit, ut eos religione motos, munificentia fiu uti cogeret: voluntate mit-tendi prius, iterum providentia cavendi ne remitteretur, liberalis.
Val. Max. i. iv. c. 8.
thage; as it was situated overagainst it, and lay highly convenient for strengthening its commerce, securing it the empire of the sea, and establishing it entirely in Sicily, by the possession of the whole island. It had therefore been imprudent to suffer such allies to be ruined by the Carthaginians; who would not have been the better friends to the Syracusans for their having renounced the Romans by force. It was therefore a decisive point, to fly immediately to the aid of the Romans; and as Syracuse would necessarily fall after Rome, it was absolutely requisite to hazard every thing, either to save Rome, or fall with her.

If the facts, which history has preserved of so long and happy a reign, are few, they do not give us the least idea of this prince, and ought to make us exceedingly regret the want of a more particular information concerning his actions.

(n) The sum of an hundred talents (an hundred thousand crowns) which he sent to the Rhodians, and the presents he made them after the great earthquake, that laid waste their island, and threw down their Colossus, are illustrious instances of their liberality and magnificence. The modesty, with which his presents were attended, infinitely exalts the value of them. He caused two statues to be erected in the Publick Place at Rhodes, representing the people of Syracuse placing a crown upon the head of the Rhodians; as if, says Polybius, Hiero, after having made that people magnificent presents, far from assuming any vanity from his munificence, believed himself their debtor upon that very account. And indeed, the liberality and beneficence of a prince to strangers is rewarded with interest, in the pleasure they give himself, and the glory he acquires by them.

There is a pastoral of Theocrites (Idyll. 16.) named after the king we speak of, wherein the poet seems to reproach that prince tacitly, with paying very ill for the verses made in honour of him. But the mean manner manner in which he claims, as it were, a reward for the verses he meditates, leaves room to conclude, that the imputation of avarice falls with more justice upon the poet than upon the prince, distinguished and esteemed, as we have seen, from his liberality.

(n) Polyb. i. v. p. 429.

(o) It is to Hiero's just taste, and singular attention to every thing that affected the publick good, that Syracuse was indebted for those amazing machines of war, of which we shall soon see it make so great an use, when besieged by the Romans. Though that prince seemed to denote his cares entirely to the tranquillity and domestick affairs of the kingdom, he did not neglect those of war; convinced, that the surest means to preserve the peace of his dominions, was to hold himself always in readiness to make war upon unjust neighbours, who should attempt to disturb it. He knew how to use the advantage of having in his dominions the most learned geometer the world had ever produced; it is plain I mean Archimedes. He was illustrious, not only by his great ability in geometry, but his birth, as he was Hiero's relation. Sensible alone to the pleasures of the mind, and highly averse to the hurry and tumult of business and government, he devoted himself solely to the study of a science, whose sublime speculations of truths purely intellectual and spiritual, and entirely distinct from matter, have such attraction with the learned of the first rank, as scarce leaves them at liberty to apply themselves to any other objects.

Hiero had, however, sufficient power with Archimedes, to engage him to descend from those lofty speculations to the practice of the mechanicks, which depend on the hand, but are disposed and directed by the head. He pressed him continually, not to employ his art always in soaring after immaterial and intellectual objects, but to bring it down to sensible and corporeal things, and to render his reasonings in some measure

(o) Plut. in Marcel. p. 305, 306.
Archimedes frequently conversed with the king, who always heard him with great attention and extreme pleasure. One day, when he was explaining to him the wonderful effects of the power of motion, he proceeded to demonstrate, That with a certain given power any weight whatsoever might be moved. And applauding himself afterwards on the force of his demonstration, he ventured to boast, that if there were another world besides this we inhabit, by going to that he could remove this at pleasure. The king, surprised and delighted, desired him to put his position in execution, by removing some great weight with a small force.

Archimedes preparing to satisfy the just and rational curiosity of his kinsman and friend, he chose one of the galleys in that port, caused it to be drawn on shore with great labour, and by abundance of men. He then ordered its usual lading to be put on board, and besides that, as many men, as it could hold. Afterwards placed himself at some distance, and sitting at his ease, without trouble, or exerting his strength in the least, by only moving with his hand the end of a machine, which he had provided with cords and pullies, he drew the galley to him upon the land, with as much ease, and as upright, as if it had swam upon the water.

The king, upon the sight of so prodigious an effect of the power of motion, was entirely astonished; and judged from that experiment the efficacy of the art, he earnestly solicited Archimedes to make several sorts of machines and battering engines for sieges and attacks, as well for the defence as assault of places.

It has been sometimes asked, whether the sublime knowledge, of which we speak, be necessary to a king; and if the study of arts and sciences ought to be a part of the education of a young prince? What
What we read here demonstrates their utility. If king Hiero had wanted taste and curiosity, and employed himself solely in his pleasures, Archimedes had remained inactive in his closet, and all his extraordinary science been of no advantage to his country. What treasures of useful knowledge lie buried in obscurity, and in a manner hid under the earth, because princes set no value upon learned men, and consider them as persons useless to the state! But when, in their youth, they have imbibed some small tincture of arts and sciences, for the study of princes ought to extend no farther in that point, they esteem such as distinguish themselves by learning, sometimes converse with them, and place them in honour, and by so glorious a protection, make way for valuable discoveries, of which the state soon reaps the advantage. Syracuse had this obligation to Hiero; which, without doubt, was the effect of his excellent education; for he had been bred with uncommon care and attention.

What has been said hitherto of Archimedes, and what we shall presently add upon the admirable machines of war, which were used during the siege of Syracuse, shews how wrong it is to despise those sublime and speculative sciences, whose only objects are simple and abstracted ideas. It is true, that all mere geometrical or algebraical speculations do not relate to useful things. But it is also as true, that most of those, which have not that relation, conduct or refer to those that have. They may appear unprofitable, as long as they do not derive from this real intellectual world; but the mixed mathematicks, which descend to matter, and consider the motions of the stars, the perfect knowledge of the navigation, the art of drawing remote objects near by the assistance of telescopes, the increase of the powers of motion, the nice exactitude of the balance, and other the like objects, become more easy of access, and in a manner familiarize themselves with the vulgar. The labour of Archimedes was long obscure, and perhaps... contemned, because he confined himself to simple and barren speculations. Ought we therefore to conclude, that it was useless and unprofitable? It was from that very source of knowledge, buried till then in obscurity, from which shot forth those living lights, and wonderful discoveries, which displayed from their birth a sensible and manifest utility, and gave the Romans astonishment and despair when they besieged Syracuse.

Hiero was great and magnificent in all things, in building palaces, arsenals, and temples. He caused an infinite number of ships of all burdens to be built for the exportation of corn; a commerce, in which almost the whole wealth of the island consisted.

(p) We are told of a galley built by his order, under the direction of Archimedes, which was reckoned one of the most famous structures of antiquity. It was a whole year in building. Hiero passed whole days amongst the workmen, to animate them by his presence.

This ship had twenty benches of oars. The enormous pile was fastened together on all sides with huge nails of copper, that weighed each ten pounds and upwards.

The inside had in it three galleries or corridors, the lowest of which led to the hold by a descent of stairs, the second to apartments, and the first to soldiers lodgings.

On the right and left side of the middle gallery, there were to the number of thirty apartments; in each of which were four beds for men. The apartment for the officers and seamen had fifteen beds, and three great rooms for eating; the last of which, that was at the poop, served for a kitchen. All the floors of these apartments were inlaid with small stones in different colours, taken from the Iliad of Homer.
The ceilings, windows, and all the other parts, were finished with wonderful art, and embellished with all kinds of ornaments.

Vol. VII.         H

(p) Athen. l. iii p. 206—290.
In the uppermost gallery, there was a gymnasium, or place of exercise, and walks proportionate to the magnitude of the ship. In them were gardens and plants of all kinds, disposed in wonderful order. Pipes, some of hardened clay, and others of lead, conveyed water all around to refresh them. There were also arbours of ivy and vines, that had their roots in great vessels filled with earth. These vessels were watered in the same manner as the gardens. The arbours served to shade the walks.

After these came the apartment of Venus with three beds. This was floored with agates and other precious stones, the finest that could be found in the island. The walls and roof were of cypress wood. The windows were adorned with ivory, paintings, and small statues. In another apartment was a library, at the top of which, on the outside, was fixed a sundial.

There was also an apartment with three beds for a bath, in which were three great coppers, and a bathing vessel, made of a single stone of various colours. This vessel contained two hundred and fifty quarts. At the ship's head was a great reservoir of water, which held an hundred thousand quarts.

All round the ship on the outside were Atlaces of six cubits, or nine feet, in height, which supported the sides of the ship; these Atlaces were at equal distance from each other. The ship was adorned on all sides with paintings, and had eight towers proportioned to its bigness; two at the head, two at the stern, and four in the middle, of equal dimensions. Upon these towers were parapets, from which stones might be discharged upon the ships of an enemy, that should approach too near. Each tower was guarded by four young men compleatly armed, and two archers. The inside of them was filled with stones and arrows.

Upon the side of the vessel, well strengthened with planks, was a kind of rampart, on which was an engine to discharge stones, made by Archimedes: It threw threw a stone of three hundred weight, and an arrow of twelve cubits, (eighteen feet) the distance of a stadium, or an hundred and twenty-five paces from it.

The ship had three masts, at each of which were two machines to discharge stones. There also were the hooks and lumps of lead to throw upon such as approached. The whole ship was surrounded with a rampart of iron to keep off those who should attempt to board it. All around were iron grappling, (corvi) which being thrown by machines, grappled the vessels of the enemy, and drew them close to the ship, from whence it was easy to destroy them. On each of the sides were sixty young men compleatly armed, and as many about the masts, and at the machines for throwing stones.

Though the hold of this ship was extremely deep, one man sufficed for clearing it of all water, with a machine, made in the nature of a screw, invented by Archimedes. An Athenian poet of that name made an epigram upon this superb vessel, for which he was well paid. Hiero sent him a thousand medimni of corn as a reward, and caused them to be carried to the port Pyræum. The medimnus, according to father Montfaucon, is a measure, that contains six bushels. This epigram is come down to us. The value of verse was known at that time in Syracuse.

Hiero having found that there was no port in Sicily capable of containing this vessel, except some, where it could not lie at anchor without danger, resolved to make a present of it to king Ptolemy, and sent it to Alexandria. There was at that time a great dearth of corn throughout all Egypt.

Several other vessels of less burden attended this great ship. Three hundred thousand quarters of corn were put on board them, with ten thousand great earthen jars of salted fish, twenty thousand quintals (or two millions of pounds) of salt meat,

* There is reason to believe this was Ptolemy Philadelphus.
twenty thousand bundles of different cloaths, without including the provisions for the ships crews and officers.

To avoid too much prolixity, I have retrenched some part of the description Athenæus has left us of this great ship. I should have been glad, that, to have given us a better idea of it, he had mentioned the exact dimensions of it. Had he added a word upon the benches of oars, it would have cleared up and determined a question, which without it must for ever remain doubtful and obscure.

Hieron's faith was put to a very severe trial, after the bloody defeat of the Romans in the battle of Cannæ, which was followed by an almost universal defection of their allies. But the wafting of his dominions by the Carthaginian troops, which their fleet had landed in Sicily, was not capable of changing him. (p) He was only afflicted to see that the contagion had spread even to his own family. He had a son named Gelon, who married Nereis the daughter of Pyrrhus, by whom he had several children, and amongst others Hieronymus, of whom we shall soon speak. Gelon, despising his father's great age, and setting no value on the alliance of the Romans, after their last disgrace at Cannæ, had declared openly for the Carthaginians. He had already armed the multitude, and solicited the allies of Syracuse to join him; and would * perhaps have occasioned great troubles in Sicily, if a sudden and unexpected death had not intervened. It happened so opportunely, that his father was suspected of having promoted it. He did not survive his son long, and died at the age of four score and ten years, infinitely regretted by his people, after having reigned fifty-four years.

(p) Liv. 1. xxxiii. n. 30.

ARTICLE II.

Sect. I. Hieronymus, grandson of Hiero, succeeds him, and causes him to be regretted by his vices and cruelty. He is killed in a conspiracy. Barbarous murder of the princesses. Hippocrates and Epicydes possess themselves of the government of Syracuse, and declare for the Carthaginians, as Hieronymus bad done.

The death of Hiero occasioned great revolutions in Sicily. The kingdom was fallen into the hands of Hieronymus his grandson, a young prince, incapable of making a wise use of his independency, and far from resisting the seducing impressions of sovereign power. Hiero's apprehensions, that the flourishing condition in which he left his kingdom would soon change under an infant king, suggested to him the thought and desire of restoring their liberty to the Syracusans. But his two daughters opposed that design with their whole credit; from the hope, that the young prince would have only the title of king, and that they should have all the authority, in conjunction with their husbands, Andranadorus and Zoippus, who held the first rank among his guardians. It was not easy for an old man of ninety, to hold out against the cares and arts of those two women, who besieged him day and night, to preserve the freedom of his mind against their pressing and assiduous insinuations, and to sacrifice with courage the interests of his family to those of the public.

To prevent as far as possible the evils he foresaw, he appointed him fifteen guardians, who were to form his council; and earnestly desired them, at his death, never to depart from the alliance with the Romans, to which he had inviolably adhered for fifty years, and

* Puerum, vix dum libertatem, numdom dominationem, modice lat turum. Liv.
† Non facile erat nonagesimum jam agenti annum, circumsesto die; nocleque muliebris blanditiis liberare animum, & convertere ad publicam privata curam. Liv.
and to teach the young prince to tread in his steps, and to follow the principles in which he had been educated till then.

The king, dying after these dispositions, the guardians he had appointed his grandson immediately summoned the assembly, presented the young prince to the people, and caused the will to be read. A small number of people, expressly placed to applaud it, clapped their hands, and raised acclamations of joy. All the rest, in a consternation equal to that of a family who have lately lost a good father, kept a mournful silence, which sufficiently expressed their grief for their loss, and their apprehension of what was to come. His funeral was afterwards solemnized, and more honoured by the sorrow and tears of his subjects, than the cares and regard of his relations for his memory.

Andranadorus's first care was to remove all the other guardians, by telling them roundly, the prince was of age to govern for himself.

He was at that time near fifteen years old. So that Andranadorus, being the first to renounce the guardianship held by him in common with many colleagues, united in his own person all their power. The dispositions, made by the wisest princes at their deaths, are often little regarded, and seldom executed afterwards.

The best and most moderate prince in the world, succeeding a king so well beloved by his subjects, as Hiero had been, would have found it very difficult to console them for the loss they had sustained. But Hieronymus, as if he had strove by his vices to make him still more regretted, no sooner ascended the throne, than he made the people sensible how much all things were altered. Neither king Hiero, nor Gelon

* Funus sit regium, magis amore civium & caritate, quam cura futorum celebre. Liv.
† Vix quidem ulli bono moderatoque regi facilis erat favor apud Syracusanos, succedenti tanta caritati Hieronis. Verum enimvero Hieronymus, velut suis vitis desiderabilem efficeret vellet avum, primo statim confectus, omnia quam disparia essent offendit. Liv.
Gelon his son, during so many years, had ever distinguished themselves from the other citizens by their habits, or any other ornaments intimating pride. Hieronymus was presently seen in a purple robe, with a diadem on his head, and surrounded by a troop of armed guards. Sometimes he affected to imitate Dionysius the tyrant, in coming out of his palace, in a chariot drawn by four white horses. All the rest of his conduct was suitable to this equipage: A visible contempt for all the world, haughty and disdainful, in hearing, and affectation of saying, disobligeing things, so difficult of access, that not only strangers, but even his guardians, could scarce approach him; a refinement of taste in discovering new methods of debauch; a cruelty so excessive, as to extinguish all sense of humanity in him: This odious disposition of the young king terrified the people to such a degree, that even some of his guardians, to escape his cruelty, either put themselves to death, or condemned themselves to voluntary banishment.

Only three men, Andranadorus and Zoippus, both Hiero's sons-in-law, and Thrafo, had a great freedom of access to the young king. He listened a little more to them than to others; but as the two first openly declared for the Carthaginians, and the latter for the Romans, that difference of sentiments, and very warm disputes frequently the consequence of it, drew upon them that prince's attention.

About this time a conspiracy against the life of Hieronymus happened to be discovered. One of the principal conspirators, named Theodotus, was accused. Being put to the question, he confessed the crime as to himself; but all the violence of the most cruel torments could not make him betray his accomplices. At length, as if no longer able to support the pains inflicted on him, he accused the king's best friends, though

* Hunc tam superbum appara-tum habitumque convenientes se-quehantur contemptus omnium hominum, superbae aures, con-tumeliosa dicta, rari aditus, non alienis modò fed tutoribus etiam; liberdines novæ, inhumana cru-delitas. Liv.
though innocent, amongst whom he named Thrafo, as the ringleader of the whole enterprise; adding, that they should never have engaged in it, if a man of his credit had not been at their head. The zeal he had always expressed for the Roman interests, rendered the evidence probable; and he was accordingly put to death. Not one of the accomplices, during their companions being tortured, either fled or concealed himself; so much they relied upon the fidelity of Theodotus, who had the fortitude to keep the secret inviolable.

The death of Thrafo, who was the sole support of the alliance with the Romans, left the field open to the partisans of Carthage. Hieronymus dispatched ambassadors to Hannibal, who sent back a young Carthaginian officer of illustrious birth, named also Hannibal, with Hippocrates and Epicydes, natives of Carthage, but descended from the Syracusans by their father. After the treaty with Hieronymus was concluded, the young officer returned to his general; the two others continued with the king by Hannibal's permission. The conditions of the treaty were, That after having driven the Romans out of Sicily, of which they fully assured themselves, the river Himera, which almost divides the island, should be the boundary of their respective dominions. Hieronymus, blown up by the praises of his flatterers, demanded, even some time after, that all Sicily should be given up to him, leaving the Carthaginians Italy for their part. The proposal appeared idle and rash, but Hannibal gave very little attention to it, having no other view at that time, than of drawing off the young king from the party of the Romans.

Upon the first rumour of this treaty, Appius, prætor of Sicily, sent ambassadors to Hieronymus, to renew the alliance made by his grandfather with the Romans. That proud prince received them with great contempt; asking them, with an air of raillery and insult, what had passed at the battle of Cannæ; that Hannibal's ambassadors had related incredible things things of it; that it was easy to know the truth from their mouths, and thence to determine upon the choice of his allies. The Romans made answer, that they would return to him, when he had learnt to treat ambassadors seriously and with reason; and, after having cautioned rather than desired him not to change sides too rashly, they withdrew.

At length his cruelty, and the other vices to which he blindly abandoned himself, drew upon him an unfortunate end. Those, who had formed the conspiracy mentioned before, purfued their scheme; and, having found a favourable opportunity for the execution of their enterprise, killed him in the city of the Leontines, on a journey he made from Syracuse into the country.

Here is a sensible instance of the difference between a king and a tyrant; and that it is not in guards or arms the security of a prince consists, but the affection of his subjects. Hiero, from being convinced, that those who have the laws in their hands for the government of the people, ought always to govern themselves by the laws, behaved in such a manner, that it might be said, the law and not Hiero reigned. He believed himself rich and powerful for no other end, than to do good, and to render others happy. He had no occasion to take precautions for the security of his life: He had always the surest guard about him, the love of his people; and Syracuse was afraid of nothing so much as of losing him. Hence he was lamented at his death as the common father of his country. Not only their mouths but hearts were long after filled with his name, and incessantly blessed his memory. Hieronymus, on the contrary, who had no other rule of conduct but violence, regarded all other men as born solely for himself, and valued himself upon governing them not as subjects but slaves, led the wretchedest life in the world, if to live were to pass his days in continual apprehension and terror. As he trusted nobody, nobody placed any confidence in him. Those who were nearest his per-
The soldiers, were the most exposed to his suspicions and cruelty, and thought they had no other security for their own lives, than by putting an end to his. Thus ended a reign of short duration, but abounding with disorders, injustice, and oppression.

(r) Appius, who foresaw the consequence of his death, gave the senate advice of all that had passed, and took the necessary precautions to preserve that part of Sicily, which belonged to the Romans. They, on their side, perceiving the war in Sicily was likely to become important, sent Marcellus thither, who had been appointed consul with Fabius, in the beginning of the fifth year of the second Punick war, and had distinguished himself gloriously by his successes against Hannibal.

When Hieronymus was killed, the soldiers, less out of affection for him, than a certain natural respect for their kings, had thoughts at first of avenging his death upon the conspirators. But the grateful name of the liberty, by which they were flattered, and the hope that was given them of the division of the tyrant’s treasures amongst them, and of additional pay, with the recital of his horrid crimes and shameful excesses, all together appeased their first heat, and changed their disposition in such a manner, that they left the prince’s body without interment, for whom they had just before expressed so warm a regret.

As soon as the death of Hieronymus was known at Syracuse, Andranadorus seized the isle, which was part of the city, with the citadel, and such other places, as were most proper for his defence in it; putting good garrisons into them. Theodorus and Sofis, heads of the conspiracy, having left their accomplices with the army, to keep the soldiers quiet, arrived soon after at the city. They made themselves masters of the quarter Achradina, where, by shewing the tyrant’s bloody robe, with his diadem, to the people, and exhorting them to take arms for the defence.

(r) Liv. 1. xxiv. n. 21—35.
fence of their liberty, they soon saw themselves at the head of a numerous body.

The whole city was in confusion. The next day, at sun-rise, all the people, armed and unarmed, ran to the quarter Achradina, where the senate was assembled, which had neither fate, nor been consulted upon any affair, from Hiero's death. Polyænus, one of the senators, spoke to the people with great freedom and moderation. He represented, "that having experienced the indignities and miseries of slavery, they were most sensibly affected with them; but that as to the evils occasioned by civil discord, they had rather heard them spoken of by their fathers, than been acquainted with them themselves: That he commended their readiness in taking arms, and should praise them still more, if they did not proceed to use them till the last extremity: That at present it was his advice to send deputations to Andranadorus, and to let him know he must submit to the senate, open the gates of the isle, and withdraw his garrisons: That if he persisted in his usurpation, it would be necessary to treat him with more rigour than Hieronymus had experienced."

This deputation at first made some impression upon him; whether he still retained a respect for the senate, and was moved with the unanimous concurrence of the citizens; or, because the best fortified part of the isle having been taken from him by treachery, and surrendered to the Syracusans; that loss gave him just apprehensions. But his wife Demarata, Hiero's daughter, a haughty and ambitious princess, having taken him aside, put him in mind of the famous saying of Dionysius the tyrant, "That it was never proper to quit the saddle, (i.e. the tyranny) till pulled off the horse by the heels: That a great fortune might be renounced in a moment; but that it would cost "abun-
"abundance of time and pains to attain it: That it "was therefore necessary to endeavour to gain time; "and whilst he amused the senate by ambiguous an-"swers, to treat privately with the soldiers at Leontium, whom it was easy to bring over to his interest, by the attraction of the king's treasures in "his possession."

Andranadorus did not entirely reject this counsel, nor think proper to give into it without reserve. He chose a mean between both. He promised to submit to the senate, in expectation of a more favourable opportunity; and the next day having thrown open the gates of the isle, repaired to the quarter Achradina; and there, after having excused his delay, and resistance, from the fear he had been in of being involved in the tyrant's punishment, as his uncle, he declared, that he was come to put his person and interests into the hands of the senate. Then turning towards the tyrant's murderers, and addressing himself to Theodotus and Sofis; "You have done," said he, "a memorable action. But believe me, your glory is only "begun, and has not yet attained the height of "which it is capable. If you do not take care to "establish peace and union amongst the citizens, the "state is in great danger of expiring, and of being "destroyed at the very moment she begins to taste "the blessings of liberty." After this discourse, he laid the keys of the isle and of the king's treasures at their feet. The whole city was highly rejoiced on this occasion, and the temples were thronged during the rest of the day with infinite numbers of people, who went thither to return thanks to the gods for so happy a change of affairs.

The next day the senate being assembled according to the ancient custom, magistrates were appointed, amongst the principal of whom Andranadorus was elected, with Theodotus and Sofis, and some others of the conspirators who were absent.

On the other side, Hippocrates and Epicydes, whom Hieronymus had sent at the head of two thousand
and men, to endeavour to excite troubles in the cities which continued to adhere to the Romans, seeing themselves, upon the news of the tyrant's death, abandoned by the soldiers under their command, returned to Syracuse, where they demanded to be escorted in safety to Hannibal, having no longer any business in Sicily after the death of him, to whom they had been sent by that general. The Syracusans were not sorry to part with those two strangers, who were of a turbulent, factious disposition, and well experienced in military affairs. There is in most affairs a decisive moment, which never returns after having been once let slip. The negligence in assigning the time for their departure, gave them opportunity to insinuate themselves into the favour of the soldiers who esteemed them upon account of their abilities, and to give them a disgust for the senate, and the better inclined part of the citizens.

Andranadorus, whose wife's ambition would never let him rest, and who, till then, had covered his designs with smooth dissimulation, believing it a proper time for disclosing them, conspired with Themistus, Gelon's son-in-law, to seize the sovereignty. He communicated his views to a comedian named Ariston, from whom he kept nothing secret. That profession was not at all dishonourable among the Greeks, and was exercised by persons of no ignoble condition. Ariston, believing it his duty, as it really was, to sacrifice his friend to his country, discovered the conspiracy. Andranadorus and Themistus were immediately killed by order of the other magistrates, as they entered the senate. The people rose, and threatened to revenge their deaths; but were deterred from it, by the sight of the dead bodies of the two conspirators which were thrown out of the senate-house. They were then informed of their pernicious designs; to which all the misfortunes of Sicily were ascribed, rather than to the wickedness of Hieronymus, who being only a youth, had acted entirely by their counsels. They insinuated, that his guardians and tutors had reigned reigned in his name: That they ought to have been cut off before Hieronymus, or at least with him: That impunity had carried them on to commit new crimes, and to aspire to the tyranny: That not being able to succeed in their design by force, they had employed dissimulation and perfidy. That neither favours and honours had been capable to overcome the wicked disposition of Andranadorus; nor the electing him one of the supreme magistrates amongst the deliverers of their country, him, who was the declared enemy of liberty: That as to the rest, they had been inspired with their ambition of reigning by the princesses of the blood royal, whom they had married, the one Hiero's, the other Gelon's daughter.

At those words the whole assembly cried out, that not one of them ought to be suffered to live, and that it was necessary to extirpate entirely the race of the tyrants, without any reserve or exception. * Such is the nature of the multitude. It either abjectly abandons itself to slavery, or lords it with insolence. But with regard to liberty, which holds the mean betwixt those extremes, it neither knows how to be without it, or to use it; and has always too many flatterers ready to enter into its passions, enflame its rage, and hurry it on to excessive violence, and the most inhuman cruelties, to which it is but too much inclined of itself; as was the case at this time. At the request of the magistrates, which was almost sooner accepted than proposed, they decreed that the royal family should be entirely destroyed.

Demarata Hiero's, and Harmonia Gelon's daughter, the first married to Andranadorus, and the other to Themistus, were killed first. From thence they went to the house of Heraclea, wife of Zoippus; who having been sent on an embassy to Ptolemy king of Egypt,

* Hæc natura multitudinis est; aut servit humiliter, aut superbe dominatur: libertatem, quæ mediæ est, nec spernere modice, nec haberë sciunt. Et non fermè de-funt irarum indulgentes ministri, qui avidos atque intemperantes plebeiorum animos ad fanguinem & caedes irritent. Liv.

Egypt, remained there in voluntary banishment, to avoid being witness of the miseries of his country. Having been apprized, that they were coming to her, that unfortunate princess had taken refuge with her two daughters in the most remote part of her house, near her household gods. When the assassins arrived there, with her hair loose and disordered, her face bathed in tears, and in a condition most proper to excite compassion, she conjured them, in a faltering voice interrupted with sobs, in the name of Hiero her father, and Gelon her brother, “Not to involve an innocent princess in the guilt and misfortunes of Hieronymus. She represented to them, that her husband’s banishment had been to her the sole fruit of that reign: That not having had any share in the fortunes and designs of her sister Demarata, she ought to have none in her punishment. Besides, what was there to fear either from her, in the forlorn condition and almost widowhood to which she was reduced, or from her daughters, unhappy orphans, without credit or support? That if the royal family were become so odious to Syracuse, that it could not bear the sight of them, they might be banished to Alexandria, the wife to her husband, the daughters to their father.” When she saw them inflexible to her remonstrances, forgetting herself, she implored them at least to save the lives of the princesses her daughters, both of an age to inspire the most inveterate and furious enemies with compassion: But her discourse made no impression upon the minds of those Barbarians. Having torn her in a manner from the arms of her household gods, they stabbed her to death in the sight of her two daughters, and soon after cut their throats, already stained, and covered with the blood of their mother. What was still more deplorable in their destiny was, that immediately after their death, an order of the people’s came for sparing their lives.

From compassion, the people in a moment proceeded to rage and fury against those, who had been so haftly in the execution, and had not left them time for reflation or repentance. They demanded that magiftrates should be nominated in the room of An-dranadorus and Themif tus. They were a long time in fuspence upon this choice. At length, somebody in the croud of the people happened to name Epi-cydes, another immediately mentioned Hippocrates. Those two persons were demanded with fo much ardour by the multitude, which confifted of citizens and foldiers, that the fenate could not prevent their being created.

The new magiftrates did not immediately discover the design they had, of re-inftating Syracuse in the interefts of Hannibal. But they had been with pain the meafures, which had been taken before they were in office. For immediately after the re-eftablifhment of liberty, ambaffadors had been fent to Appius, to pro-pofe renewing the alliance, broken by Hieronymus. He had referred them to Marcellus, who was lately arried in Sicily, with an authority superior to his own. Marcellus, in his turn, fent deputies to the magiftrates of Syracuse, to treat of peace.

Upon arriving there, they found the state of affairs much altered. Hippocrates and Epicydes, at firft by secret practices, and afterwards by open complaints, had infpired every body with great aversion for the Romans; giving out, that defigns were formed for putting Syracuse into their hands. The behaviour of Appius, who had approached the entrance of the port with his fleet, to encourage the party in the Roman interest, ftrengthened thofe fufpicious and accufations fo much, that the people ran tumultuously to prevent the Romans from landing, in cafe they should have that design.

In this trouble and confusion it was thought proper to fummon the assembly of the people. Opinions differed very much in it; and the heat of debates giving reafon to fear fome fedition, Apollonides, one of the principal fenators, made a discourse very fuitable to the conjunction. He intimated, "that never city city was nearer its destruction or preservation than Syracuse actually was at that time: That if they all with unanimous consent should join either the Romans or Carthaginians, their conditions would be happy: That if they were divided, the war would neither be more warm nor more dangerous between the Romans and Carthaginians, than between the Syracusans themselves against each other, as both parties must necessarily have, within the circumference of their own walls, their own troops, armies, and generals: That it was therefore absolutely requisite to make their agreement and union amongst themselves their sole care and application; and that to know which of the two alliances was to be preferred, was not now the most important question: That for the rest, the authority of Hiero, in his opinion, ought to carry it against that of Hieronymus, and that the amity of the Romans, happily experienced for fifty years together, seemed preferable to that of the Carthaginians, upon which they could not much rely for the present, and with which they had as little reason to be satisfied with regard to the past. He added a last motive of no mean force, which was, that in declaring against the Romans, they would have the war immediately upon their hands; whereas, on the side of Carthage, the danger was more remote.

The less passionate this discourse appeared, the more effect it had. It induced them to desire the opinion of the several bodies of the state; and the principal officers of the troops, as well natives as foreigners, were requested to confer together. The affair was long discussed with great warmth. At length, as it appeared that there was no present means for supporting the war against the Romans, a peace with them was resolved, and ambassadors sent to conclude it.

Some days after this resolution had been taken, the Leontines sent to demand aid of Syracuse, for the defence defence of their frontiers. This deputation seemed to come very seasonably for discharging the city of a turbulent unruly multitude, and removing their no less dangerous leaders. Four thousand men were ordered to march under the command of Hippocrates, of whom they were glad to be rid, and who was not sorry himself for the occasion they gave him to embroil affairs. For he no sooner arrived upon the frontier of the Roman province, than he plundered it, and cut in pieces a body of troops sent by Appius to its defence. Marcellus complained to the Syracusans of this act of hostility, and demanded, that this stranger should be banished from Sicily with his brother Epicydes; who having repaired about the same time to Leontium, had endeavoured to embroil the inhabitants with the people of Syracuse, by exhorting them to resume their liberty as well as the Syracusans. The city of the Leontines was dependant on Syracuse; but pretended at this time to throw off the yoke, and to act independantly of the Syracusans, as an entirely free city. Hence, when the Syracusans sent to complain of the hostilities committed against the Romans, and to demand the expulsion of the two Carthaginian brothers, the Leontines replied, that they had not empowered the Syracusans to make peace for them with the Romans.

The deputies of Syracuse related to Marcellus this answer from the Leontines, who were no longer at the disposition of their city, and left him at liberty to declare war against them, without any infracion of the treaty made with them. He marched immediately to Leontium, and made himself master of it at the first attack. Hippocrates and Epicydes fled. All the deserters found in the place, to the number of two thousand, were put to the sword; but as soon as the city was taken, all the Leontines and other soldiers were spared, and even every thing taken from them was restored, except what was lost in the first tumult of a city carried by storm.

Eight thousand troops, sent by the magistrates of Syracuse
Syracuse to the aid of Marcellus, met a man on their march, who gave them a false account of what had passed at the taking of Leontium; exaggerating with artful malice the cruelty of the Romans, who, he falsely affirmed, had put all the inhabitants to the sword, as well as the troops sent thither by the Syracusans.

This artful falsehood, which they swallowed without suspicion, inspired them with compassion for their companions. They expressed their indignation by their murmurs. Hippocrates and Epicydes, who were before well known to these troops, appeared at the very instant of this trouble and tumult, and put themselves under their protection, not having any other resource. They were received with joy and acclamations. The report soon reached the rear of the army, where the commanders Dinomenes and Sosis were. When they were informed of the cause of the tumult, they advanced hastily, blamed the soldiers for having received Hippocrates and Epicydes, the enemies of their country, and gave orders for their being seized and bound. The soldiers opposed this with great menaces; and the two generals sent express to Syracuse, to inform the senate of what had passed.

The army however continued its march towards Mægara, and upon the way met a courier prepared by Hippocrates, who was charged with a letter, which seemed to be written by the magistrates of Syracuse to Marcellus. They praised him for the slaughter he had made at Leontium, and exhorted him to treat all the mercenary soldiers in the same manner, in order that Syracuse might at length be restored to its liberty. The reading of this forged letter enraged the mercenaries, of whom the body of troops was almost entirely composed. They were for falling upon the few Syracusans amongst them, but were prevented from that violence by Hippocrates and Epicydes; not from the motives of pity or humanity, but that they might not entirely lose their hopes of re-entering Syracuse.
Syracuse. They sent a man thither, whom he had gained by bribes, who related the storming of Leontium conformable to the first account. Those reports were favourably received by the multitude, who cried out, that the gates should be shut against the Romans. Hippocrates and Epicydes arrived about the same time before the city, which they entered, partly by force, and partly by the intelligence they had within it. They killed the magistrates, and took possession of the city. The next day the slaves were set at liberty, the prisoners made free, and Hippocrates and Epicydes elected into the highest offices, in a tumultuous assembly. Syracuse, in this manner, after a short irradiation of liberty, sunk again into its former slavery.

Sect. II. The consul Marcellus besieges Syracuse. The considerable losses of men and ships, occasioned by the dreadful machines of Archimedes, oblige Marcellus to change the siege into a blockade. He takes the city at length by means of his intelligence within it. Death of Archimedes, killed by a soldier who did not know him.

Affairs being in this state, Marcellus thought proper to quit the country of the Leontines, and advance towards Syracuse. When he was near it, he sent deputies to let the inhabitants know, that he came to restore liberty to the Syracusans, and not with intent to make war upon them. They were not permitted to enter the city. Hippocrates and Epicydes went out to meet them; and having heard their proposals, replied haughtily, that if the Romans intended to besiege their city, they should soon be made sensible of the difference between attacking Syracuse and attacking Leontium. Marcellus therefore determined to besiege the place by

OF SYRACUSE.

By sea and land; by land on the side of Hexapyla; and by sea, on that of the quarter Achradina, the walls of which were washed by the waves.

He gave Appius the command of the land-forces, and referred that of the fleet to himself. It consisted of sixty galleys of five benches of oars, which were full of soldiers armed with bows, slings, and darts, to scour the walls. There were a great number of vessels, laden with all sorts of machines, used in attacking places.

The Romans carrying on their attacks at two different places, Syracuse was in great consternation, and apprehended, that nothing could oppose so terrible a power, and such mighty efforts. And it had indeed been impossible to have resisted them, without the assistance of a single man, whose wonderful industry was every thing to the Syracusans: This was Archimedes. He had taken care to supply the walls with all thing necessary to a good defence. As soon as his machines began to play on the land-side, they discharged upon the infantry all sorts of darts, and stones of enormous weight, which flew with so much noise, force, and rapidity, that nothing could oppose their shock. They beat down and dashed to pieces all before them, and occasioned a terrible disorder in the ranks of the besiegers.

Marcellus succeeded no better on the side of the sea. Archimedes had disposed his machines in such a manner, as to throw darts to any distance. Though the enemy lay far from the city, he reached them with his larger and more forcible balistæ and catapultæ. When they overshot their mark, he had smaller, proportioned to the distance; which put the Romans into such confusion, as made them incapable of attempting any thing.

This was not the greatest danger. Archimedes had placed lofty and strong machines behind the walls, which suddenly letting fall vast beams, with an immense weight at the end of them, upon the ships, sunk them.

* The description of Syracuse may be seen in Vol. III. p. 197.
to the bottom. Besides this, he caused an iron grapple to be let out by a chain; the person who guided the machine, having caught hold of the head of a ship with this hook, by the means of a weight let down within the walls, it was lifted up, and set upon its stern, and held so for some time; then by letting go the chain, either by a wheel or a pulley, it was let fall again with its whole weight either on its head or side, and often entirely sunk. At other times the machines dragging the ship towards the shore by cordage and hooks, after having made it whirl about a great while, dashed it to pieces against the points of the rocks, which projected under the walls, and thereby destroyed all within it. Gallies, frequently seized and suspended in the air, were whirled about with rapidity, exhibiting a dreadful sight to the spectators, after which they were let fall into the sea, and sunk to the bottom, with all that were in them.

Marcellus had prepared, at great expense, machines called sambucae, from their resemblance to a musical instrument of that name. He appointed eight gallies of five benches for that use, from which the oars were removed, from half on the right, and from the other half on the left side. These were joined together, two and two, on the sides without oars. This machine consisted of a ladder of the breadth of four feet, which when erect was of equal height with the walls. It was laid at length upon the sides of two gallies joined together, and extended considerably beyond their beaks; upon the masts of these vessels were affixed cords and pulleys. When it was to work, the cords were made fast to the extremity of the machine, and men upon the poop drew it up by the help of the pulleys; others at the head assisted in raising it with levers. The gallies afterwards being thrust forward to the foot of the walls, the machines were applied to them. The bridge of the sambuca was then let down, (no doubt after the manner manner of a drawbridge) upon which the besiegers passed to the walls of the place besieged.

This machine had not the expected effect. Whilst it was at a considerable distance from the walls, Archimedes discharged a vast stone upon it that weighed ten quintals, then a second, and immediately after a third; all which striking against it with dreadful force and noise, beat down and broke its supports, and gave the gallies upon which it stood such a shock, that they parted from each other.

Marcellus, almost discouraged, and at a loss what to do, retired as fast as possible with his gallies, and lent orders to his land-forces to do the same. He called also a council of war, in which it was resolved the next day, before sun-rise, to endeavour to approach the walls. They were in hopes, by this means, to shelter themselves from the machines, which, for want of a distance proportioned to their force, would be rendered ineffectual.

But Archimedes had provided against all contingencies. He had prepared machines long before, as we have already observed, that carried to all distances a proportionate quantity of darts, and ends of beams, which being very short, required less time for preparing them, and in consequence were more frequently discharged. He had besides made small chafms or loop-holes in the walls at little distances, where he had placed scorpions, which not carrying far, wounded those who approached, without being perceived but by that effect.

When the Romans, according to their design, had gained the foot of the walls, and thought themselves very well covered, they found themselves exposed either to an infinity of darts, or overwhelmed with stones, which fell directly upon their heads; there

* The quintal, which the Greeks called τάλαβς, was of several kinds. The least weighed an hundred and twenty-five pounds; the largest more than twelve hundred.
† The scorpions were machines in the nature of cross-bows, which the ancients used in discharging darts and darts and stones.
being no part of the wall which did not continually pour that mortal hail upon them. This obliged them to retire. But they were no sooner removed, than a new discharge of darts overtook them in their retreat; so that they lost great numbers of men, and almost all their galleys were disabled or beat to pieces, without being able to revenge their losses in the least upon their enemies. For Archimedes had planted most of his machines in security behind the walls; and the Romans, says Plutarch, repulsed by an infinity of wounds, without seeing the place or hand from which they came, seemed to fight in reality with the gods.

Marcellus, though at a loss what to do, and not knowing how to oppose the machines of Archimedes, could not, however, forbear pleasantries upon them. "Shall we persist," said he to his workmen and engineers, "in making war with this Briareus of a geometrician, who treats my galleys and tambucas so rudely? He infinitely exceeds the fabled giants with their hundred hands, in his perpetual and surprazing discharges upon us." Marcellus had reason for referring to Archimedes only. For the Syracusans were really no more than members of the engines and machines of that great geometrician, who was himself the soul of all their powers and operations. All other arms were unemployed, for the city at that time made use of none, either defensive or offensive, but those of Archimedes.

Marcellus at length perceiving the Romans so much intimidated, that if they saw upon the walls only a small cord, or the least piece of wood, they would immediately fly, crying out, that Archimedes was going to discharge some dreadful machine upon them; he renounced his hopes of being able to make a breach in the place, gave over his attacks, and turned the siege into a blockade. The Romans conceived, they had no other resource than to reduce the great number of people in the city by famine, in cutting off all provisions that might be brought to them.
them either by sea or land. During the eight months in which they besieged the city, there were no kind of stratagems which they did not invent, nor any actions of valour left untried, almost to the assault, which they never dared to attempt more. So much force, upon some occasions, have a single man, and a single science, when rightly applied. Deprive Syracuse of only one old man, the great strength of the Roman arms must inevitably take the city; his sole presence arrests and disconcerts all their designs.

We here see, which I cannot repeat too often, how much interest princes have in protecting arts, favouring the learned, encouraging academies of science by honourable distinctions and actual rewards, which never ruin or impoverish a state. I say nothing in this place of the birth and nobility of Archimedes; he was not indebted to them for the happiness of his genius, and profound knowledge: I consider him only as a learned man, and an excellent mathematician. What a loss had Syracuse sustained, if to have saved a small expense and pension, such a man had been abandoned to inaction and obscurity! Hiero was far from such a conduct. He knew all the value of our mathematician; and it is no vulgar merit in a prince to understand that of other men. He placed it in honour; he made it useful; and did not stay, till occasion or necessity obliged him to do so; which would have been too late. By a wise foresight, the true character of a great prince and a great minister, in the very * arms of peace he provided all that was necessary for supporting a siege, and making war with success; though at that time there was no appearance of any thing to be apprehended from the Romans, with whom Syracuse was allied in the strictest manner. Hence were seen to arise in an instant, as out of the earth, an incredible number of machines of every kind and size, the very sight of which were sufficient to strike armies with terror and confusion.

* In pace, ut sapiens, aptarit idonea bello. Horat.
And wise in peace, prepared the arms of war.
There is, among these machines, of which we can scarce conceive the effects, what might tempt us to call their reality in question, if it were allowable to doubt the evidence of writers, such, for instance, as Polybius, an almost contemporary author, who treated facts entirely recent, and such as were well known to all the world. But how can we refuse our consent to the united authority of Greek and Roman historians, in regard to circumstances, of which whole armies were witnesses, in experiencing the effects, and which had so great an influence in the events of the war? What passed in this siege of Syracuse, shews how high the ancients had carried their genius and art in besieging and supporting sieges. Our artillery, which so perfectly imitates thunder, has not more effect than the engines of Archimedes, if they have so much.

A burning-glass is spoke of, by the means of which Archimedes is said to have burnt part of the Roman fleet. That must have been an extraordinary invention; but as no ancient author mentions it, it is no doubt a modern tradition without any foundation. Burning-glasses were known to antiquity, but not of that kind, which indeed seem impracticable.

(1) After Marcellus had resolved to confine himself to the blockade of Syracuse, he left Appius before the place with two thirds of the army, advanced with the other into the island, and brought over some cities to the Roman interest.

At the same time Himilcon, general of the Carthaginians, arrived in Sicily with a great army, in hopes of reconquering it, and expelling the Romans.

Hippocrates left Syracuse with ten thousand foot and five hundred horse to join him, and carry on the war in concert against Marcellus. Epicydes remained in the city, to command there during the blockade.

The fleets of the two states appeared at the same time on the coast of Sicily; but that of the Carthaginians ans seeing itself weaker than the other, was afraid to venture a battle, and soon failed back for Carthage.

(1) Liv. l. xxiv. n. 35, 36.

Marcellus had continued eight months before Syracuse with Appius, according to Polybius, when the year of his consulship expired. Livy places the expedition of Marcellus in Sicily, and his victory over Hippocrates, in this year, which must have been the second year of the siege. And indeed Livy has given us no account of this second year, because he had ascribed to the first what passed in the second. For it is highly improbable, that nothing memorable happened in it. This is the conjecture of Mr. Crevier, professor of rhetorick in the college of Beavvais, who published a new edition of Livy, with remarks, and with which I am convinced the publick were well pleased. The first volume of the said work contains a long preface, which is well worth reading.

Marcellus therefore employed a great part of the second year of the siege in several expeditions into Sicily. In his return from Agrigentum, upon which he had made an effectual attempt, he came up with the army of Hippocrates, which he defeated, and killed above eight thousand men. This advantage kept those in their duty, who had entertained thoughts of going over to the Carthaginians. After the gaining of this victory, he returned against Syracuse, and having dismissed Appius for Rome, who went thither to demand the consulship, he put Crispinus into his place.

(4) In the beginning of the third campaign, Marcellus, almost absolutely despairing of being able to take Syracuse, either by force, because Archimedes continually opposed him with invincible obstacles, or famine, as the Carthaginian fleet, which was returned more numerous than before, easily threw in convoys, deliberated whether he should continue before Syracuse to push the siege, or turn his endeavours against Agrigentum. But before he came to a final determination, mination, he thought it proper to try whether he could not make himself master of Syracuse by some secret intelligence. There were many Syracusans in his camp, who had taken refuge there in the beginning of the troubles. A slave of one of these secretly carried on an intrigue, in which four score of the principal persons of the city engaged, who came in companies to consult with him in his camp, concealed in barks under the nets of fishermen. The conspiracy was on the point of taking effect, when a person named Attalus, in resentment for not having been admitted into it, discovered the whole to Epicydes, who put all the conspirators to death.

This enterprise having miscarried in this manner, Marcellus found himself in new difficulties. Nothing employed his thoughts but the grief and shame of raising a siege, after having consumed so much time, and sustained the loss of so many men and ships in it. An accident supplied him with a resource, and gave new life to his hopes. Some Roman vessels had taken one Damippus, whom Epicydes had sent to negotiate with Philip king of Macedon. The Syracusans expressed a great desire to ransom this man, and Marcellus was not averse to it. A place near the port Trogilus was agreed on for the conferences concerning the ransom of the prisoner. As the deputies went thither several times, it came into a Roman soldier's thoughts to consider the wall with attention. After having counted the stones, and examined with his eye the measure of each of them, upon a calculation of the height of the wall, he found it to be much lower than it was believed, and concluded, that with ladders of a moderate size it might be easily scaled. Without loss of time he related the whole to Marcellus. The general is not always the only wise man in an army; a private soldier may sometimes furnish him with important hints. Marcellus did not neglect this advice, and assured himself of its reality with his own eyes. Having caused ladders to be prepared, he took the opportunity of a festival, festival, that the Syracusans celebrated for three days in honour of Diana, during which the inhabitants gave themselves up entirely to rejoicing and good cheer. At the time of night when he conceived that the Syracusans, after their debauch, began to grow drowsy and fall asleep, he made a thousand chosen troops, in profound silence, advance with their ladders to the wall. When the first got to the top without noise or tumult, the others followed, encouraged by the boldness and success of their leaders. These thousand soldiers, taking the advantage of the enemy's stillness, who were either drunk or asleep, soon scaled the wall. Having thrown down the gate of Hexapylum, they took the quarter of the city called Epipolis.

It was then no longer time to deceive, but terrify, the enemy. The Syracusans, awakened by the noise, began to rouze, and to prepare for action. Marcellus made all his trumpets found together, which so frightened and alarmed them, that all the inhabitants fled, believing every quarter of the city in the possession of the enemy. The strongest and best part, however, called Achradina, was not yet taken, because separated by its walls from the rest of the city.

Marcellus at day-break entered * Villanova, or the new city, by the quarter called Tycha. Epicydes, having immediately drawn up some troops, which he had in the ile adjoining to Achradina, marched against Marcellus: But finding him stronger and better attended than he expected, after a slight skirmish, he shut himself up in the quarter Achradina.

All the captains and officers with Marcellus congratulated him upon this extraordinary success. For himself, when he had considered from an eminence the loftiness, beauty, and extent of that city, he is said to have shed tears, and to have deplored the unhappy condition it was upon the point of experiencing. He called to mind the two powerful Athenian

* The new city, or Neapolis, was times had been taken into the city and called Epipolis, and in the latter surrounded with walls.
The two numerous armies cut in pieces, with the illustrious generals who commanded them: The many wars sustained with so much valour against the Carthaginians: The many famous tyrants and potent kings, Hiero particularly, whose memory was still recent, who had signalized himself by so many royal virtues, and still more, by the important services he had rendered the Roman people, whose interests had always been as dear to him as his own. Moved by that reflection, he believed it incumbent upon him, before he attacked Achradina, to send to the besieged, to exhort them to surrender voluntarily, and prevent the ruin of their city. His remonstrances and exhortations had no effect.

To prevent interruption by his rear, he then attacked a fort called Eurylaus, which lay at the bottom of the new town, and commanded the whole country on the land-side. After having carried it, he turned all his efforts against Achradina.

During these transactions, Hippocrates and Himilcon arrived. The first with the Sicilians having placed and fortified his camp near the great gate, and giving the signal to those who were in possession of Achradina, attacked the old camp of the Romans, in which Cripinus commanded: Epicydes, at the same time made a sally upon the posts of Marcellus. Neither of these enterprizes was successful. Hippocrates was vigorously repulsed by Cripinus, who pursued him as far as his entrenchments, and Marcellus obliged Epicydes to shut himself up in Achradina. As it was then autumn, there happened a plague, which killed great numbers in the city, and still more in the Roman and Carthaginian camps. The distemper was not excessive at first, and proceeded only from the bad air and season: But afterwards the communication with the infected, and even the care taken of them, dispersed the contagion; from whence it happened, that some, neglected and absolutely abandoned, died of the violence of the malady, malady, and others received help, which became fatal to those who brought it. Death, and the sight of such as were buried, continually presented a mournful object to the eyes of the living. Nothing were heard night and day but groans and lamentations. At length, the being accustomed to the evil had hardened their hearts to such a degree, and so far extinguished all sense of compassion in them, that they not only ceased to grieve for the dead, but left them without interment. Nothing was to be seen everywhere but dead bodies, exposed to the view of those who expected the same fate. The Carthaginians suffered much more from it than the others. As they had no place to retire to, they almost all perished with their generals Hippocrates and Himilcon. Marcellus, from the breaking out of the disease, had brought his soldiers into the city, where the roofs and shade was of great relief to them; he lost, however, no considerable number of men.

Bomilcar, notwithstanding, who commanded the Carthaginian fleet, and had made a second voyage to Carthage to bring a new supply, returned with an hundred and thirty ships, and seven hundred transports. He was prevented by contrary winds from doubling the cape of Pacymus. Epicydes, who was afraid, that if those winds continued, this fleet might be discouraged and return to Africa, left Achradina to the care of the generals of the mercenary troops, and went to Bomilcar, whom he persuaded to try the event of a naval battle. Marcellus, seeing the troops of the Sicilians encamped every day, and that if he stayed, and suffered himself to be shut up in Syracuse, he should be very much pressed at the same time both by sea and land, resolved, though not strong in ships, to oppose the passage of the Carthaginian fleet. As soon as the high winds abated, Bomilcar stood to sea in order to double the cape: But when he saw the Roman ships advance towards him in good order, on a sudden, for what reason is not said, he took to flight, sent orders to the transports to regain Africa, and retired to Tarentum. Epicydes, who had been disappointed in such great hopes, and was apprehensive of returning into a city already half taken, made fail for Agrigentum, rather with design to wait the event of the siege in that place, than to make any new attempt from thence.

When it was known in the camp of the Sicilians, that Epicydes had quitted Syracuse, and the Carthaginians Sicily, they sent deputies to Marcellus, after having founded the dispositions of the besieged, to treat upon the conditions Syracuse should surrender. It was agreed with unanimity enough on both sides, that what had appertained to the kings should appertain to the Romans; that the Sicilians should retain all the rest with their laws and liberty. After these preliminaries, they demanded a conference with those Epicydes had charged with the government in his absence. They told them, they had been sent by the army to Marcellus and the inhabitants of Syracuse, in order that all the Sicilians, as well within as without the city, might have the same fate, and that no separate convention might be made. Having been permitted to enter the city, and to confer with their friends and relations, after having informed them of what they had already agreed with Marcellus, and giving them assurances, that their lives would be safe, they persuaded them to begin, by removing the three governors Epicydes had left in his place, which was immediately put in execution.

After which, having assembled the people, they represented, "That for whatever miseries they had suffered till then, or should suffer from thenceforth, they ought not to accuse fortune, as it depended upon themselves alone to put an end to them: That if the Romans had undertaken the siege of Syracuse, it was out of affection not enmity to the Syracusans: That it was not till after they had been apprized of the oppressions they suffered from Hippocrates and Epicydes, those ambitious agents of Hannibal, and afterwards of Hieronymus, that" they had taken arms and began the siege of the city, not to ruin it, but to destroy its tyrants: That as Hippocrates was dead, Epicydes, no longer in Syracuse, his lieutenants slain, and the Carthaginians dispossessed of Sicily, both by sea and land, what reason could the Romans now have for not inclining as much to preserve Syracuse, as if Hiero, the sole example of faith to them, were still alive? That neither the city nor the inhabitants had any thing to fear but from themselves, if they let slip the occasion of renewing their amity with the Romans: That they never had so favourable an opportunity as the present, when they were just delivered from the violent government of their tyrants; and that the first use they ought to make of their liberty, was to return to their duty.

This discourse was perfectly well received by every body. It was however judged proper to create new magistrates before the nomination of deputies; the latter of which were chosen out of the former. The deputy who spoke in their name, and who was instructed solely to use his utmost endeavours that Syracuse might not be destroyed, addressed himself to Marcellus to this effect: "It was not the people of Syracuse, who first broke the alliance, and declared war against you, but Hieronymus, less criminal still to Rome than to his country: And afterwards, when the peace was restored by his death, it was not any Syracusan that infringed it, but the tyrant's instruments, Hippocrates and Epicydes. They were the enemies who have made war against you, after having made us slaves, either by violence, or fraud and perfidy; and it cannot be said that we have had any times of liberty that have not also been times of peace with you. At present, as soon as we are become masters of ourselves by the death of those who held Sicily in subjection, we come the very instant to deliver up to you our arms, our persons, our walls, and our city, determined not to refuse any conditions you shall I shall think fit to impose. For the rest," continued he, addressing himself always to Marcellus, "your interest is as much concerned as ours. The gods have granted you the glory of having taken the finest and most illustrious city possessed by the Greeks. All we have ever achieved of memorable, either by sea or land, augments and adorns your triumph. Fame is not a sufficiently faithful chronicler to make known the greatness and strength of the city you have taken; posterity can only judge of them by its own eyes. It is necessary that we should shew to all travellers, from whatever part of the universe they come, sometimes the trophies we have obtained from the Athenians and Carthaginians, and sometimes those you have acquired from us; and that Syracuse, thus placed for ever under the protection of Marcellus, may be a lasting, an eternal monument of the valour and clemency of him, who took and preserved it. It is unjust that the remembrance of Hieronymus should have more weight with you than that of Hiero. The latter was much longer your friend than the former your enemy. Permit me to say you have experienced the amity of Hiero: "But the senseless enterprizes of Hieronymus have fallen solely upon his own head."

The difficulty was not to obtain what they demanded from Marcellus, but to preserve tranquillity and union amongst those in the city. The delectors, convinced that they should be delivered up to the Romans, inspired the foreign soldiers with the same fear. Both the one and the other having therefore taken arms, whilst the deputies were still in the camp of Marcellus, they began, by cutting the throats of the magistrates newly elected; and dispersing themselves on all sides, they put all to the sword they met, and plundered whatever fell in their way. That they might not be without leaders, they appointed six officers, three to command in Achradina, and three in the isle. The tumult being at length appeased, the the foreign troops were informed from all hands, it was concluded with the Romans, that their cause should be entirely distinct from that of the defectors. At the same instant, the deputies sent to Marcellus arrived, who fully undeceived them.

Amongst those who commanded in Syracuse, there was a Spaniard named Mericus: Him means was found to corrupt. He gave up the gate near the fountain Arethusa to soldiers, sent by Marcellus in the night to take possession of it. At day-break the next morning, Marcellus made a false attack at Achradina, to draw all the forces of the citadel, and the isle adjoining to it, to that side, and to facilitate the throwing some troops into the isle, which would be unguarded by some vessels he had prepared. Everything succeeded according to his plan. The soldiers, whom those vessels had landed in the isle, finding almost all the posts abandoned, and the gates by which the garrison of the citadel had marched out against Marcellus still open, they took possession of them after a slight encounter. Marcellus having received advice that he was master of the isle, and of part of Achradina, and that Mericus, with the body under his command, had joined his troops, ordered a retreat to be founded, that the treasures of the kings might not be plundered. They did not rise so high in their amount as was imagined.

The defectors having escaped, a passage being expressly left open for them, the Syracusans opened all their gates to Marcellus, and sent deputies to him with instructions to demand nothing further from him, than the preservation of the lives of themselves and their children. Marcellus having assembled his council, and some Syracusans who were in his camp, gave his answer to the deputies in their presence: "That Hiero, for fifty years, had not done the Roman people more good, than those who had been masters of Syracuse some years past, had intended to do them harm; but that their ill-will had fallen upon their own heads, and they had punished" punished themselves for their violation of treaties in a more severe manner, than the Romans could have desired: That he had besieged Syracuse during three years, not that the Roman people might reduce it into slavery, but to prevent the chiefs of the revolters from continuing it under oppression: That he had undergone many fatigues and dangers in so long a siege; but that he thought he had made himself ample amends by the glory of having taken that city, and the satisfaction of having saved it from the entire ruin it seemed to deserve.

After having placed a guard upon the treasury, and safe-guards in the houses of the Syracusans, who had withdrawn into his camp, he abandoned the city to be plundered by the troops. It is reported, that the riches which were pillaged in Syracuse at this time, exceeded all that could have been expected at the taking of Carthage itself.

An unhappy accident interrupted the joy of Marcellus, and gave him a very sensible affliction. Archimedes, at a time when all things were in this confusion at Syracuse, shut up in his closet like a man of another world, who had no regard for what passed in this, was intent upon the study of some geometrical figure, and not only his eyes, but the whole faculties of his soul, were so engaged in this contemplation, that he had neither heard the tumult of the Romans, universally busy in plundering, nor the report of the city's being taken. A soldier on a sudden comes in upon him, and bids him follow him to Marcellus. Archimedes desired him to stay a moment, till he had solved his problem, and finished the demonstration of it. The soldier, who regarded neither his problem nor demonstration, enraged at this delay, drew his sword and killed him. Marcellus was exceedingly afflicted, when he heard the news of his death. Not being able to restore him to life, of which he would have been very glad, he applied himself to honour his memory to the utmost of his power. He made a diligent search after all his relations,
ARTICLE III.

SECT. I. Tomb of Archimedes discovered by Cicero.

ARCHIMEDES, by his will, had desired his relations and friends to put no other epitaph on his tomb, after his death, but a cylinder circumscribed by a sphere; that is to say, a globe or spherical figure; and to set down at the bottom the relation of these two solids, the containing and the contained, have to each other. He might have filled up the bases of the columns of his tomb with relievos, whereon the whole history of the siege of Syracuse might have been carved, and himself appeared like another Jupiter thundering upon the Romans. But he set an infinitely higher value upon a discovery, a geometrical demonstration, than upon all the so-much celebrated machines of his invention.

Hence he chose rather to do himself honour with posterity, by the discovery he had made of the relation of a sphere to a cylinder of the same base and height; which is as two to three.

The Syracusans, who had been in former times so fond of the sciences, did not long retain the esteem and gratitude they owed a man, who had done so much honour to their city. Less than an hundred and forty years after, Archimedes was so perfectly forgot by his citizens, notwithstanding the great services he had done them, that they denied his having been buried at Syracuse. It is from Cicero we have this circumstance.
(4) At the time he was quaestor in Sicily, his curiosity induced him to make a search after the tomb of Archimedes; a curiosity that became a man of Cicero’s genius, and which merits the imitation of all who travel. The Syracusans assured him, that his search would be to no purpose, and that there was no such monument amongst them. Cicero pitied their ignorance, which only served to increase his desire of making that discovery. At length, after several fruitless attempts, he perceived, without the gate of the city facing Agrigentum, amongst a great number of tombs in that place, a pillar almost entirely covered with thorns and brambles, through which he could discern the figure of a sphere and cylinder. Those, who have any taste for antiquities, may easily conceive the joy of Cicero upon this occasion. He cried out, that he found what he had looked for. The place was immediately ordered to be cleared, when they saw the inscription still legible, though part of the lines were obliterated by time. †So that, says Cicero, in concluding his account, the greatest city of Greece, and most flourishing of old in the studies of science, would not have known the treasure it possessed, if a man, born in a country it considered almost as barbarous, had not discovered for it the tomb of its citizen, so highly distinguished by force and penetration of mind.

We are obliged to Cicero for having left us this curious and elegant account: But we cannot easily pardon him the contemptuous manner in which he speaks at first of Archimedes. It is in the beginning, where intending to compare the unhappy life of Dionysius the tyrant with the felicity of one passed in sober virtue, and abounding with wisdom, he says ‡:

(4) Cic. Tusc. Quæst. l. v. n. 64, 66.
† Ita nobilissima Graecia civitas, quando viam etiam doctissima, sui civis unius acutissimi monumentum ignoraret, nisi ab homine Arpinete didiciisset.
‡ Non ergo jam cum his vita, qua tetrus, miserus, detestabilis excogitaret nihil posse, Platonis aut Architeis vitam comparabo, doctorum hominum & plane sapientum. Ex eadem urbe.
OF SYRACUSE.

"I will not compare the lives of a Plato or an "Architas, persons of consummate learning and "wisdom, with that of Dionysius, the most horrid, "the most miserable, and the most detestable that "can be imagined. I should have recourse to a "man of his own city, a little obscure person, "who lived many years after him. I should pro- "duce him from his dust, and bring him upon the "stage with his rule and compasses in his hand." Not to mention the birth of Archimedes, whose great- ness was of a different class, the greatest geometri- cian of antiquity, whose sublime discoveries have in all ages been the admiration of the learned, should Cicero have treated this man as little and obscure as a common artificer, employed in making machines? unless it be, perhaps, because the Romans, with whom a taste for geometry and such speculative sciences never gained much ground, esteemed nothing great but what related to government and policy.

Orabunt causas melius, cœlique meatus
Describent radio, & surgentia sidera dicent:
Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento.
Virgil. Æn. 6.

Let others better mold the running mass
Of metals, and inform the breathing brass,
And soften into fleés a marble face;
Plead better at the bar, describe the skies,
And when the stars descend and when they rise;
But, Rome, 'tis thine alone with awful sway
To rule mankind, and make the world obey;
Disposing peace and war, thy own majestic way, Dryden.

(b) This is the Abbe Fraguier's reflection in the short dissertation he has left us upon this passage of Cicero.

(b) Memoirs of the academy of inscriptions, Vol. II.
Sect. II. Summary of the history of Syracuse.

The island of Sicily, with the greatest part of Italy, extending between the two seas, composed what was called Græcia major, in opposition to Greece properly so called, which had peopled all those countries by its colonies.

Syracuse was the most considerable city of Sicily, and one of the most powerful of all Greece. It was founded by Achitas the Corinthian, in the third year of the seventeenth Olympiad.

The two first ages of its history are very obscure, and therefore we are silent upon them. It does not begin to be known till after the reign of Gelon, and furnishes in the sequel many great events, for the space of more than two hundred years. During all that time it exhibits a perpetual alternative of slavery under the tyrants, and liberty under a popular government; till Syracuse is at length subjected to the Romans, and makes part of their empire.

I have treated all these events, except the last, in the order of time. But as they are cut into different sections, and dispersed into different books, we thought proper to unite them here in one point of view, that their series and connection might be the more evident, from their being shewn together and in general, and the places pointed out, where they are treated with due extent.

Gelon. The Carthaginian, in concert with Xerxes, having attacked the Greeks who inhabited Sicily, whilst that prince was employed in making an irruption into Greece; Gelon, who made himself master of Syracuse, obtained a celebrated victory over the Carthaginians, the very day of the battle of Thermopylae. Hamilcar, their general, was killed in this battle. Historians speak differently of his death, which had occasioned my falling into a contradiction. For on one side I suppose, with * Diodorus Siculus, that he was killed by the Sicilians in the battle; and

* In the history of the Carthaginians. and on the other I say, after Herodotus, that to avoid the shame of surviving his defeat, he threw himself into the pile, in which he had sacrificed human victims.

Gelon, upon returning from his victory, repaired to the assembly without arms or guards, to give the people an account of his conduct. He was chosen king unanimously. He reigned five or six years solely employed in the truly royal care of making his
p. 73, &c.

Hiero I. Hiero, the eldest of Gelon's brothers, succeeded him. The beginning of his reign was worthy of great praise. Simonides and Pindar celebrated him in emulation of each other. The latter part of it did not answer the former. He reigned eleven years.
Vol. III. p. 79, &c.

Thrasibulus. Thrasibulus his brother succeeded him. He rendered himself odious to all his subjects, by his vices and cruelty. They expelled him the throne and city, after a reign of one year. Vol. III.
p. 85.

Times of liberty.

After this expulsion, Syracuse and all Sicily enjoyed their liberty for the space of almost sixty years.
An annual festival was instituted to celebrate the day upon which their liberty was re-established.

Syracuse attacked by the Athenians.

During this interval, the Athenians, animated by the warm exhortations of Alcibiades, turned their arms against Syracuse; this was in the sixth year of the Peloponnesian war. How fatal the event of this war was to the Athenians, may be seen, Vol. III.
p. 183, &c.

Dionysius the elder. The reign of this prince is famous for its length of thirty-eight years; and still more for the extraordinary events with which it was Dionysius the younger. Dionysius, son of the elder Dionysius, succeeded him. He contracted a particular intimacy with Plato, and has frequent conversations with him; who comes to his court at the request of Dion, the near relation of Dionysius. He did not long improve from the wise precepts of that philosopher, and soon abandoned himself to all the vices and excesses which attend tyranny.

Beseiged by Dion, he escapes from Sicily, and retires into Italy.

Dion's excellent qualities. He is assassinated in his own house by Callippus.

Thirteen months after the death of Dion, Hippias, brother of Dionysius the younger, expels Callippus, and establishes himself in Syracuse. During the two years of his reign, Sicily is agitated by great commotions.

Dionysius the younger taking advantage of those troubles, re-asceends the throne ten years after having quitted it.

At last, reduced by Timoleon, he retires to Corinth.

Times of liberty.

Timoleon restores liberty to Syracuse. He passes the rest of his life there in a glorious retirement, beloved and honoured by all the citizens and strangers.

This interval of liberty was of no long duration.

Agathocles. Agathocles, in a short time, makes himself tyrant of Syracuse.

He commits unparalleled cruelties.

He forms one of the boldest designs related in history; carries the war into Africa; makes himself master of the strongest places, and ravages the whole country.

After various events he perishes miserably. He reigned about twenty-eight years.
OF SYRACUSE.

Times of liberty.

Syracuse took new life again for some time, and tasted with joy the sweets of liberty. But she suffered much from the Carthaginians, who disturbed her tranquillity by continual wars. She called in Pyrrhus to her aid. The rapid success of his arms, at first, gave him great hopes, which soon vanished. Pyrrhus, by a sudden retreat, plunged the Syracusans into new misfortunes. Vol. I. p. 172, &c. Vol. V. p. 328, &c.

Hiero II. They were not happy and in tranquillity till the reign of Hiero II. which was very long, and almost always pacifick.

Hieronymus. He scarce reigned one year. His death was followed with great troubles, and the taking of Syracuse by Marcellus. After that period, what passed in Sicily to its total reduction is little remarkable. There were still some remains of war fomented in it by the partisans of tyranny, and the Carthaginians who supported them: But those wars had no consequence, and Rome was soon absolute mistress of all Sicily. Half the island had been a Roman province from the treaty which put an end to the first Punick war. By that treaty, Sicily was divided into two parts: the one continued in the possession of the Romans, and the other under the government of Hiero; which last part, after the surrender of Syracuse, fell also into their hands.

Sect. III. Reflections upon the government and character of the Syracusans, and upon Archimedes.

By the taking of Syracuse all Sicily became a province of the Roman empire: But it was not treated as the Spaniards and Carthaginians were afterwards, upon whom a certain tribute was imposed as the reward of the victory, and punishment of the vanquished:

Dei vixtoriae præmium, ac poena belli. Sicily, Sicily, in submitting to the * Roman people, retained all her ancient rights and customs, and obeyed them upon the same conditions she had obeyed her kings. And she certainly well deserved that privilege and distinction. † She was the first of all the foreign nations that had entered into alliance and amity with the Romans; the first conquest their arms had the glory to make out of Italy; and the first country that had given them the grateful experience of commanding a foreign people. The greatest part of the Sicilian cities had expressed an unexampled attachment, fidelity and affection for the Romans. The island was afterwards a kind of pass for their troops into Africa; and Rome would not so easily have reduced the formidable power of the Carthaginians, if Sicily had not served it as a magazine, abounding with provisions, and a secure retreat for their fleets. Hence after the taking and ruin of Carthage, Scipio Africanus thought himself obliged to adorn the cities of Sicily with a great number of excellent paintings and curious statues; in order that a people, who were so highly satisfied with the success of the Roman arms, might be sensible of its effects, and retain illustrious monuments of their victories amongst them.

Sicily would have been happy in being governed by the Romans, if they had always given her such magistrates as Cicero, knowing like him in the obligations of his function, and like him intent upon the due discharge of it. It is highly pleasing to hear him explain plain himself upon the subject; which he does in his defence of Sicily against Verres.

* Siciliae civitates sic in amici-tiam recepimus, ut eodem jure, effent, quo fuissent; eadem conditione populo R. parerent qua suis antea paruisissent. Cic.

After having invoked the gods as witnesses of the sincerity of what he is going to expose, he says: "In all the employments with which the Roman people have honoured me to this day, I have ever thought myself obliged, by the most sacred ties of religion, worthily to discharge the duties of them. When I was made quaestor, I looked upon that dignity not as a gratuity conferred upon me for my particular use, but as a deposit confided to my vigilance and fidelity. When I was afterwards sent to act in that office, I thought all eyes were turned upon me, and that my person and administration in a manner exhibited as a spectacle to the view of all the world; and in this thought I not only denied myself all pleasures of an extraordinary kind, but even those that are authorized by nature and necessity. I am now intended for ædile. I call the gods to witness, that how honourable soever this dignity seems to me, I have too just a sense of its weight, not to have more solicitude and disquiet, than joy and pleasure from it; so much I desire to make it appear, that it was not bestowed on me by chance, or the necessity of being filled up; but con-

* Odii immortales—Ita mihi mean voluntatem spemque reli-que vitæ vestra populique R. exstitiam comprobet, ut ego quos adhuc mihi magistratus populos. R. mandavit, sic eos accepi, ut me omnium officiorum obfringi religionem arbitrarer. Ita quaestor sum factus, ut mihi ho-norem illum non tam datum quam creditum ac commissum putarem. Sic obtinui quaesturam in provincia, ut omnium oculos in me unum coniectos arbitrarer; ut me quaesturamque mean quas in aliquaque orbis terrae theatro verfari exiílimarem; ut omnia semper, qua jucunda videntur esse, non modo his extraordinariis cupiditatiis, sed etiam ipsi naturae ac necessitati denegarem. Nunc sum designatus ædilis—Ita mihi deos omnes propitios esse velim, ut tametì mihi jucundissimus est honos populi, tamen nequaquam tantum capio voluptatis, quantum sollicitudinis & laboris, ut haec ipsa sedilitas, non quia necessis fuit alicui candidato data, sed quia sic oportenrit recte collocata, & judicio populi digno in loco posita esse videatur." Cic. Verre: 7. n. 35--37.

"fided deservedly by the choice and discernment of my country."

All the Roman governors were far from being of this character; and Sicily, above all other provinces, experienced, as *Cicero in some lines after reproaches Verres, that they were almost all of them like so many tyrants, who believed themselves only attended by the fasces and axes, and invested with the authority of the Roman empire, to exercise in their province an open robbery of the publick with impunity, and to break through all the barriers of justice and shame in such a manner, that no man’s estate, life, house, or even honour, were safe from their violence.

Syracuse, from all we have seen of it, ought to appear like a theatre, on which many different and surprizing scenes have been exhibited; or rather like a sea, sometimes calm and untroubled, but oftener violently agitated by winds and storms, always ready to overwhelm it entirely. We have seen in no other republick, such sudden, frequent, violent, and various revolutions: Sometimes enslaved by the most cruel tyrants, at others under the government of the wisest kings; sometimes abandoned to the capricious will of a populace, without either government or restriction; sometimes perfectly docile and submissive to the authority of law, and the empire of reason, it passed alternately from the most insupportable slavery to the most grateful liberty, from a kind of convulsions and frantick emotions, to a wise, peaceable, and regular conduct. The reader will easily call to mind, on the one side, Dionysius the father and son, Agathocles and Hieronymus, whose cruelties made them the objects of the publick hatred and detestation.

* Nunquam tibi venit in mentem, non tibi idcirco fases & secures, & tantam imperii vim, tantamque ornamentiorem omnium dignitatem datam; ut earum rerum vi & auctoritate omnia repagula juris, pudoris, & officii perfringe-
O F S Y R A C U S E.

To what are such opposite extremes and vicissitudes so contrary to be attributed? Undoubtedly, I think, the levity and inconstancy of the Syracusans, which was their distinguishing characteristical, had a great share in them; but what I am convinced conduced the most to them, was the very form of their government, compounded of the aristocratick and democratick, that is to say, divided between the senate or elders, and the people. As there was no counterpoise in Syracuse to support a right balance between those two bodies, when authority inclined either to the one side or the other, the government presently changed either into a violent and cruel tyranny, or an unbridled liberty, without order or regulation. The sudden confusion at such times of all orders of the state, made the way to sovereign power easy to the most ambitious of the citizens: To attract the affection of their country, and soften the yoke to their fellow-citizens, some exercised that power with lenity, wisdom, equity, and popular behaviour; and others, by nature less virtuously inclined, carried it to the last excess of the most absolute and cruel despotism, under pretext of supporting themselves against the attempts of their citizens, who, jealous of their liberty, thought every means for the recovery of it legitimate and laudable.

There were besides other reasons, that rendered the government of Syracuse difficult, and thereby made way for the frequent changes it underwent. That city did not forget the signal victories it had obtained against the formidable power of Africa, and that it had carried victorious arms and terror even to the walls of Carthage; and that not once only, as afterwards against the Athenians, but during several ages. The high idea its fleets and numerous troops suggested of its maritime power, at the time of the irruption of the Persians into Greece, occasioned its pretending to equal Athens in that respect, or at least to divide the empire of the sea with that state.

Besides which, riches, the natural effect of commerce, had rendered the Syracusans proud, haughty, and imperious, and at the same time had plunged them into a sloth and luxury, that inspired them with a disgust for all fatigue and application. They generally abandoned themselves blindly to their orators, who had acquired an absolute ascendant over them. In order to make them obey, it was necessary either to flatter or reproach them.

They had naturally a fund of equity, humanity, and good nature; and yet when influenced by the seditious discourses of the orators, they would proceed to excessive violence and cruelties, which they immediately after repented.

When they were left to themselves, their liberty, which at that time knew no bounds, soon degenerated into caprice, fury, violence, and I might say even phrenzy. On the contrary, when they were subjected to the yoke, they became base, timorous submissive, and creeping like slaves. But as this condition was violent, and directly contrary to the character and disposition of the Greek nation, born and nurtured in liberty, the sense of which was not wholly extinguished in them, and only lulled asleep; they waked from time to time from their lethargy, broke their chains, and made use of them, if I may be admitted to use the expression, to beat down and destroy the unjust masters who had imposed them.

With a small attention to the whole series of the history of the Syracusans, it may easily be perceived, (as Galba afterwards said of the Romans) that * they were equally incapable of bearing either entire liberty or entire servitude. So that the ability and policy of those who governed them, consisted in keeping the people people to a wise medium between those two extremes, by seeming to leave them an entire freedom in their resolutions, and referring only to themselves the care of explaining the utility, and facilitating the execution of good measures. And in this the magistrates and kings we have spoken of were wonderfully successful, under whose government the Syraculans always enjoyed peace and tranquility, were obedient to their princes, and perfectly submissive to the laws. And this induces me to conclude, that the revolutions of Syracuse were less the effect of the people's levity, than the fault of those that governed them, who had not the art of managing their passions, and engaging their affection, which is properly the science of kings, and of all who command others.

* Imperaturus es hominibus; qui nec totam servitudinem pati posunt, nec totam libertatem. Tacit. Hist. i. i. c. 16.
BOOK THE TWENTY-SECOND.

THE HISTORY OF PONTUS.

CHAP. I.

SECT. I. MITHRIDATES, at twelve years old, ascends the throne of Pontus. He seizes Cappadocia and Bithynia, having first expelled their kings. The Romans re-establish them. He causes all the Romans in Asia minor to be put to the sword in one day. First war of the Romans with MITHRIDATES, who had made himself master of Asia minor, and Greece, where he had taken Athens. SYLLA is charged with this war. He besieges and retakes Athens. He gains three great battles against the generals of MITHRIDATES. He grants that prince peace in the fourth year of the war. Library of Athens, in which were the works of ARISTOTLE. SYLLA causes it to be carried to Rome.

MITHRIDATES, king of Pontus, whose history we are now beginning, and who rendered himself so famous by the war he supported, during almost thirty years, against the Romans, was surnamed Eupator. He descended from a house, which had given a long succession of kings to the kingdom of Pontus. The first, according to some historians, was Artabafus, one of the seven princes that flew the Magi, and set the crown of Peria sia upon the head of Darius Hystaspes, who rewarded him with the kingdom of Pontus. But besides that we do not find the name of Artabasus amongst those Persians, many reasons induce us to believe, that the prince of whom we speak, was the son of Darius, the same who is called Artabazanes, who was competitor with Xerxes for the throne of Persia, and was made king of Pontus either by his father or his brother, to console him for the preference given to Xerxes. His posterity enjoyed that kingdom during seventeen generations. Mithridates Eupator, of whom we shall treat in this place, was the sixteenth from him.

He was but twelve years of age when he began to reign. His father, before his death, had appointed him his successor, and had given him his mother for guardian, who was to govern jointly with him. (x) He began his reign by putting his mother and brother to death; and the sequel answered but too well to such a beginning of it. (y) Nothing is said of the first years of his reign, except that one of the Roman generals, whom he had corrupted with money, having surrendered, and put him into possession of Phrygia, it was soon after taken from him by the Romans, which gave birth to his enmity for them.

Ariarathes king of Cappadocia being dead, Mithridates caused the two sons he had left behind him to be put to death, though their mother Laodice was his own sister, and placed one of his own sons, at that time very young, upon the throne, giving him the name of Ariarathes, and appointing Gordius his guardian and regent. Nicomedes king of Bithynia, who apprehended this increase of power would put Mithridates into a condition to possess himself also of his dominions in time, thought proper to set up a certain young man (who seemed very fit for such a part) as third son of Ariarathes. He engaged Laodice, whom he had espoused after the death of her first husband, husband, to acknowledge him as such, and sent her to Rome, to assist and support by her presence the claim of his pretended son, whom she carried thither along with her. The cause being brought before the senate, both parties were condemned, and a decree passed, by which the Cappadocians were declared free. But they said they could not be without a king. The senate permitted them to choose whom they thought fit. They elected Ariobarzanes, a nobleman of their nation. Sylla, upon his quitting the office of praetor, was charged with the commission of establishing him upon the throne. That was the pretext for this expedition; but the real motive of it was, to check the enterprizes of Mithridates, whose power daily augmenting, gave umbrage to the Romans. Sylla executed his commission the following year; and after having defeated a great number of Cappadocians, and a much greater of Armenians, who came to their aid, he expelled Gordius, with the pretended Ariarathes, and set Ariobarzanes in his place.

(x) Memnon in Excerptis Photii, c. xxxii.
(y) Appian. in Mithrid, p. 177, 178.

Whilst Sylla was encamped upon the banks of the Euphrates, a Persian, named Orobafus, arrived at his camp from king Arfaces *, to demand the alliance and amity of the Romans. Sylla received him at his audience, caused three seats to be placed in his tent, one for Ariobarzanes, who was present, another for Orobafus, and that in the midst for himself. The Parthian king afterwards, offended at his deputy, for having acquiesced in this instance of the Roman pride, caused him to be put to death. This is the first time the Parthians had any commerce with the Romans.

Mithridates did not dare at that time to oppose the establishment of Ariobarzanes; but dissembling the mortification that conduct of the Romans gave him, he resolved to take an opportunity of being revenged upon them. In the mean while, he applied himself in cultivating good alliances for the augmentation of his strength, and began with Tigranes king of Armenia, a very powerful prince. (a) Armenia had at first appertained to the Persians; it came under the Macedonians afterwards, and upon the death of Alexander, made part of the kingdom of Syria. Under Antiochus the Great, two of his generals, Artaxius and Zadriades with that prince’s permission, established themselves in this province, of which it is probable they were before governors. After the defeat of Antiochus they adhered to the Romans, who acknowledged them as kings. They had divided Armenia into two parts: Tigranes, of whom we now speak, descended from Artaxius. He possessed himself of all Armenia, subjected several neighbouring countries by his arms, and thereby formed a very powerful kingdom. Mithridates gave him his daughter Cleopatra in marriage, and engaged him to enter so far into his project against the Romans, that they agreed Mithridates should have the cities and countries they should conquer for his share, and Tigranes the people, with all the effects capable of being carried away.

* This was Mithridates II.
OF PONTUS.

Their first enterprise and act of hostility was committed by Tigranes, who deprived Ariobarzanes of Cappadocia, of which the Romans had put him into possession, and re-established Ariarathes, the son of Mithridates, in it. Nicomedes, king of Bithynia, happened to die about this time: His eldest son, called also Nicomedes, ought naturally to have succeeded him, and was accordingly proclaimed king. But Mithridates set up his younger brother Socrates against him, who deprived him of the throne by force of arms. The two dethroned kings went to Rome, to implore aid of the senate, who decreed their re-establishment, and sent Manius Aquilius and M. Altinius to put that decree in execution.

They were both re-instated. The Romans advised them to make irruptions into the lands of Mithridates, promising them their support; but neither the one nor the other dared to attack so powerful a prince so near home. At length, however, Nicomedes, at the joint instances of the ambassadors, to whom he had promised great sums for his re-establishment, and of his creditors, Roman citizens settled in Asia, who had lent him very considerably for the same effects, could no longer resist their solicitations. He made incursions upon the lands of Mithridates, ravaged all the flat country as far as the city Amastris, and returned home laden with booty, which he applied in discharging part of his debts.

(a) Strab. l. xi. p. 531, 532.

Mithridates was not ignorant by whose advice Nicomedes had committed this irruption. He might easily have repulsed him, having a great number of good troops on foot; but he did not take the field. He was glad to place the wrong on the side of the Romans, and to have a just cause for declaring war against them. He began by making remonstrances to their generals and ambassadors. Pelopidas was at the head of this embassy. He complained of the various contraventions of the Romans to the treaty of alliance subsisting between them and Mithridates, and in particular, of the protection granted by them to Nicomedes, his declared enemy. The ambassadors of the latter replied with complaints on their side of Mithridates. The Romans, who were unwilling to declare themselves openly at present, gave them an answer in loose and general terms; that the Roman people had no intention that Mithridates and Nicomedes should injure each other.

Mithridates, who was not satisfied with this answer, made his troops march immediately into Cappadocia, expelled Ariobarzanes again, and set his son Ariarathes upon the throne, as he had done before. At the same time, he sent his ambassador to the Roman generals to make his apology, and to complain of them again. Pelopidas declared to them, that his master was contented the Roman people should judge in the affair, and added, that he had already sent his ambassadors to Rome. He exhorted them not to under-undertake any thing, till they had received the senate's orders; nor engage rashly in a war, that might be attended with fatal consequences. For the rest, he gave them to understand, that Mithridates, in case justice were refused him, was in a condition to right himself. The Romans, highly offended at so haughty a declaration, made answer; that Mithridates had orders immediately to withdraw his troops from Cappadocia, and not continue to disturb Nicomedes or Ariobarzanes. They ordered Pelopidas to quit the camp that moment, and not return, unless his master obeyed. The other ambassadors were no better received at Rome.

The rupture was then inevitable, and the Roman generals did not wait till the orders of the senate and people arrived; which was what Mithridates had demanded. The design he had long formed of declaring war against the Romans, had occasioned his having made many alliances, and engaged many nations in his interests. Twenty-two languages, of as many different people, were reckoned amongst his troops, all which Mithridates himself spoke with facility. His army consisted of two hundred and fifty thousand foot, and forty thousand horse; without including an hundred and thirty armed chariots, and a fleet of four hundred ships.

Before he proceeded to action, he thought it necessary to prepare his troops for it, and made them a long discourse to animate them against the Romans. He represented to them, "That there was no room for examining whether war or peace were to be preferred; that the Romans, by attacking them first, had spared them that enquiry: That their business was to fight and conquer: That he assured himself of success, if the troops persisted to act with the same valour they had already shewn upon...

(e) Justin. L. xxxviii. c. 3-7.

I have abridged this discourse extremely, which Justin repeats at length, as it flourished in Trogus Pompeius, of whom he is only the epitomiser. The discourse is a specimen of that excellent historian's style, and ought to make us very much regret the loss of his writings.
upon so many occasions, and lately against the same enemies, whom they had put to flight, and cut to pieces in Bithynia and Cappadocia: That there could not be a more favourable opportunity than the present, when the Marii infested and ravaged the heart itself of Italy; when Rome was torn in pieces by civil wars, and an innumerable army of the Cimbri from Germany over-ran all Italy: That the time was come for humbling those proud Republicans, who had the same view with regard to the royal dignity, and had sworn to pull down all the thrones of the universe: That for the rest, the war his soldiers were now entering upon, was highly different from that they had sustained with so much valour in the horrid desarts, and frozen regions of Scythia: That he should lead them into the most fruitful and temperate country of the world, abounding with rich and opulent cities, which seemed to offer themselves an easy prey: That Asia, abandoned to be devoured by the infatiable avarice of the proconsuls, the inexorable cruelty of tax-farmers, and the crying injustice of corrupt judges, had the name of Roman in horror, and impatiently expected them as her deliverers: That they followed him not so much to a war, as to assured victory and certain spoils." The army answered this discourse with universal shouts of joy, and reiterated protestations of service and fidelity.

The Romans had formed three armies out of their troops

* Nunc se diversam bell-conditionem ingredi. Nam neque ccelo Afiæ esse temperatius aliud, nec solo fertilitis, nec urbium multitudine amanius; magnamque temporis partem, non ut militiam, sed ut sefiam diem, acturos, bello dubium facili magis an uberi tantumque se avida expeætat Afiæ, ut etiam vocibus vocet: adeo illis odium Romanorum incuflit rapacitas proconsulium, sectio publicanorum, calumniæ litium. Jus-tin—Sectio publicanorum in this passage properly signifies the forcible sale of the goods of those who, for default of payment of taxes and imposts, had their estates and effects seized on and sold by the publicans. Calumniæ litium are the unjust quirks and chicanery, which served as pretexts for depriving the rich of their estates, either upon account of taxes, or under some other colour.
troops in the several parts of Asia minor. The first was commanded by Cassius, who had the government of the province of Pergamus; the second by Manius Aquilius; the third by Q. Oppius proconsul, in the province of Pamphylia. Each of them had forty thousand men, including the cavalry. Besides these troops, Nicomedes had fifty thousand foot, and six thousand horse. They began the war, as I have already observed, without waiting orders from Rome, and carried it on with so much negligence and so little conduct, that they were all three defeated on different occasions, and their armies ruined. Aquilius and Oppius themselves were taken prisoners, and treated with all kinds of insults. Mithridates, considering Aquilius as the principal author of the war, treated him with the highest indignities. He made him pass in review before the troops, and presented him as a fight to the people mounted on an ass, obliging him to cry out with a loud voice, that he was Manius Aquilius. At other times he obliged him to walk on foot with his hands fastened by a chain to a horse, that drew him along. At last he made him swallow molten lead, and put him to death with the most exquisite torments. The people of Mitylene had treacherously delivered him up to Mithridates, at a time when he was sick, and had retired to their city for the recovery of his health.

(f) Mithridates, who was desirous of gaining the people's hearts by his reputation for clemency, sent home all the Greeks he had taken prisoners, and supplied them with provisions for their journey. That instance of his goodness and lenity opened the gates of all the cities to him. The people came out to meet him everywhere with acclamations of joy. They gave him excessive praises, called him the preserver, the father of the people, the deliverer of Asia, with all the other names ascribed to Bacchus, to which he had a just title, for he passed for the prince of

of his times, (g) who could drink most without being disordered; a quality he valued himself upon, and thought much to his honour.

The fruits of his first victories were the conquest of all Bithynia, from which Nicomedes was driven; of Phrygia and Myidia, lately made Roman provinces; of Lycia, Pamphylia, Paphlagonia, and several other countries.

Having found at Stratonicea a young maid of exquisite beauty, named Monima, he took her along with him in his train.

(b) Mithridates considering that the Romans, and all the Italians in general, who were at that time in Asia minor upon different affairs, carried on secret intrigues much to the prejudice of his interests, he sent private orders from Ephesus, where he then was, to the governors of the provinces, and magistrates of the cities of Asia minor, to massacre them all upon a day fixed *. The women, children, and domesticks, were included in this proscription. To these orders was annexed a prohibition, to give interment to those who should be killed. Their estates and effects were to be confiscated for the use of the king, and the murderers. A severe fine was laid upon such as should conceal the living, or bury the dead; and a reward appointed for whoever discovered those that were hid. Liberty was given to the slaves, who killed their masters; and debtors forgiven half their debts, for killing their creditors. The repetition only of this horrid order, is enough to make one tremble with horror. What then must have been the desolation in all those provinces when it was put in execution! Fourscore thousand Romans and Italians were butchered in consequence of it. Some make the slain amount to almost twice that number.

Being

(g) Plut. Sympos. l. i. p. 624.  (b) Appian. p. 185. Cic. in Orat. pro lege Manil. n. 7.

* Is uno die, tota Asia, tot in civitatis, uno nuntio, atque una literarum significacione, cives Ro-
OF PONTUS. 155

(i) Being informed that there was a great treasure at Cos, he sent people thither to seize it. Cleopatra queen of Egypt had deposited it there, when she undertook the war in Phœnicia against her son Lathyrus. Besides this treasure, they found eight hundred talents, (eight hundred thousand crowns) which the Jews in Asia minor had deposited there, when they saw the war ready to break out.

(k) All those, who had found means to escape this general slaughter in Asia, had taken refuge in Rhodes, which received them with joy, and afforded them a secret retreat. Mithridates laid siege to that city ineffectually, which he was soon obliged to raise, after having been in danger of being taken himself in a sea-fight, wherein he lost many of his ships.

(l) When he had made himself master of Asia minor, Mithridates sent Archelaus, one of his generals, with an army of an hundred and twenty thousand men into Greece. That general took Athens, and chose it for his residence, giving all orders from thence, in regard to the war on that side. During his stay there, he engaged most of the cities and states of Greece in the interests of his master. He reduced Delos by force, which had revolted from the Athenians, and reinstated them in the possession of it. He sent them the sacred treasure, kept in that island by Aristion, to whom he gave two thousand men as a guard for the money. Aristion was an Athenian philosopher, of the sect of Epicurus. He employed the two thousand men under his command to seize all authority at Athens, where he exercised a most cruel tyranny, putting many of the citizens to death, and sending many to Mithridates, upon pretence that they were of the Roman faction.

Such was the state of affairs when Sylla was charged with the war against Mithridates. He set out immediately for Greece with five legions, and some cohorts cohorts and cavalry. Mithridates was at that time at Pergamus, where he distributed riches, governments, and other rewards to his friends.

Upon Sylla's arrival, all the cities opened their gates to him, except Athens, which, subjected to the tyrant Aristion's yoke, was obliged unwillingly to oppose him. The Roman general, having entered Attica, divided his troops into two bodies, the one of which he sent to besiege Aristion in the city of Athens, and with the other he marched in person to the port Pyræus, which was a kind of second city, where Archelaus had shut himself up, relying upon the strength of the place, the walls being almost sixty feet high, and entirely of hewn stone. The work was indeed very strong, and had been raised by the order of Pericles in the Peloponnesian war, when the hopes of victory depending solely upon this port, he had fortified it to the utmost of his power.

The height of the walls did not amaze Sylla. He employed all sorts of engines in battering it, and made continual assaults. If he would have waited a little, he might have taken the higher city without striking a blow, which was reduced by famine to the last extremity. But being in haste to return to Rome, and apprehending the changes that might happen there in his absence, he spared neither danger, attacks, nor expense, in order to hasten the conclusion of that war. Without enumerating the rest of the warlike stores and equipage, twenty thousand mules were perpetually employed in working the machines only. Wood happening to fall short, from the great consumption made of it in the machines, which were often either broke and spoiled by the vast weight they carried, or burnt by the enemy, he did not spare the sacred groves. He cut down the trees in the walks of the Academy and Lyceum, which were the finest and best planted in the suburbs, and caused the high walls that joined the port to the city to be demolished, in order to make use of the ruins in erecting his works, and carrying on his approaches.
As he had occasion for abundance of money in this war, and desired to attach the soldiers to his interests, and to animate them by great rewards, he had recourse to the inviolable treasures of the temples, and caused the finest and most precious gifts, consecrated at Epidaurus and Olympia, to be brought from thence. He wrote to the Amphyctions assembled at Delphos, "That they would act wisely "in sending him the treasures of the god, because "they would be more secure in his hands; and if he "should be obliged to make use of them, he would "return the value after the war." At the same time he sent one of his friends, named Caphis, a native of Phocis, to Delphos, to receive all those treasures by weight.

When Caphis arrived at Delphos, he was afraid, out of reverence for the god, to meddle with the gifts consecrated to him, and wept, in the presence of the Amphyctions, the necessity imposed upon him. Upon which, some person there having said, that he heard the sound of Apollo's lyre from the inside of the sanctuary, Caphis, whether he really believed it, or was for taking that occasion to strike Sylla with a religious awe, he wrote him an account of what happened. Sylla, deriding his simplicity, replied, "That "he was surprized he should not comprehend, that "singing was a sign of joy, and by no means of anger "and resentment; and therefore he had nothing to "do but to take the treasures boldly, and be assured, "that the god saw him do so with pleasure, and gave "them to him himself."

Plutarch, on this occasion, observes upon the difference between the ancient Roman generals, and those of the times we now speak of. The former, whom merit alone had raised to office, and who had no views from employments but the publick good, knew how to make the soldiers respect and obey them, without descending to use low and unworthy methods for that purpose. They commanded troops, that were wise, disciplined, and well inured to execute the orders of their generals without reply or delay. Truly kings, says * Plutarch, in the grandeur and nobility of their sentiments, but simple and modest private persons in their train and equipage, they put the state to no other expense in the discharge of their offices, than what was reasonable and necessary, conceiving it more shameful in a captain to flatter his soldiers, than to fear his enemies. Things were much changed in the times we now speak of. The Roman generals, abandoned to insatiable ambition and luxury, were obliged to make themselves slaves to their soldiers, and to buy their services by gifts proportioned to their avidity, and often by the toleration and impunity of the greatest crimes.

Sylla, in consequence, was perpetually in extreme want of money to satisfy his troops, and then more than ever for carrying on the siege he had engaged in, the success of which seemed to him of the highest importance, both to his honour and safety. He was for depriving Mithridates of the only city he had left in Greece, and which, by preventing the Romans from passing into Asia, made all hopes of conquering that prince vain, and would oblige Sylla to return shamefully into Italy, where he would have found more terrible enemies in Marius and his faction. He was besides sensibly galled by the offensive raiillery Aristion vented every day against himself and his wife Metella.

It is not easy to say whether the attack or defence were conducted with most vigour; for both sides behaved with incredible courage and resolution. The fallies were frequent, and attended with almost battles in form, in which the slaughter was great, and the loss generally not very unequal. The besieged would not have been in a condition to have made so vigorous a defence, if they had not received several considerable reinforcements by sea.

What hurt them most, was the secret treachery of two Athenian slaves that were in the Piræus. Tho's slaves,
O F P O N T U S.

Slaves, whether out of affection to the Roman party, or desirous of providing for their own safety, in case the place was taken, wrote upon leaden balls all that passed within, and threw them with slings to the Romans. So that whatever wise measures Archelaus took, who defended the Piræus, whilst Aristion commanded in the city, nothing succeeded. He resolved to make a general sally; the traitors flung a leaden ball with this intelligence upon it: "To-morrow, at such an hour, the foot will attack your works, and the horse your camp." Sylla laid ambushes, and repulsed the besieged with losses. A convoy of provisions was in the night to have been thrown into the city that was in want of all things. Upon advice of the same kind the convoy was intercepted.

Notwithstanding all these disadvantages, the Athenians defended themselves like lions. They found means either to burn most of the machines erected against the walls, or by undermining them to throw them down and break them to pieces.

The Romans, on their side, behaved with no less vigour. By the help of mines also they made a way to the bottom of the walls, under which they followed the ground, and having propt the foundation with beams of wood, they afterwards set fire to the props with a great quantity of pitch, sulphur, and tow. When those beams was burnt, part of the wall fell down with an horrible noise, and a large breach was opened, through which the Romans advanced to the assault. The battle continued a great while with equal ardour on both sides, but the Romans were at length obliged to retire. The next day they renewed the attack. The besieged had built a new wall during the night in the form of a crescent, in the place where the other had fallen; and the Romans found it impossible to force it.

Sylla, discouraged by so obstinate a defence, resolved to attack the Piræus no longer, and confined himself to reduce the place by famine. The city, on the other side, was at the last extremity. A bushel of of barley had been sold in it for a thousand drachmas (about five-and-twenty pounds sterling.) The inhabitants did not only eat the grass and roots, which they found about the citadel, but the flesh of horses, and the leather shoes, which they boiled soft. In the midst of the publick misery, the tyrant passed his days and nights in debauch. The senators and priests went to throw themselves at his feet, conjuring him to have pity on the city, and to obtain a capitulation from Sylla: He dispersed them with arrows, and in that manner drove them from his presence.
THE HISTORY

He did not demand a cessation of arms, nor send deputies to Sylla, till reduced to the last extremity. As those deputies made no proposals, and asked nothing of him to the purpose, but ran on in praising and extolling Theseus, Eumolpus, and the exploits of the Athenians against the Medes; Sylla was tired with their discourse, and interrupted them, by saying, "Gentlemen haranguers, you may go back again, "and keep your rhetorical flourishes for yourselves. "For my part, I was not sent to Athens to be in- "formed of your ancient prowess, but to chastise your "modern revolt."

During this audience, some spies having entered the city, overheard by chance some old men talking of the quarter called * Ceramicus, and blaming the tyrant exceedingly for not guarding a certain part of the wall, that was the only place by which the enemy might easily scale the walls. At their return into the camp, they related what they had heard to Sylla. The parley had been to no purpose. Sylla did not neglect the intelligence given him. The next night he went in person to take a view of the place, and finding the wall actually accessible, he ordered ladders to be raised against it, began the attack there, and having made himself master of the wall after a weak resistance, entered the city. He would not suffer it to be set on fire, but abandoned it to be plundered by

* The publick place at Athens.
by the soldiery, who in several houses found human flesh, which had been dressed to be eaten. A dreadful slaughter ensued. The next day all the slaves were sold by auction, and liberty was granted to the citizens who had escaped the swords of the soldiers, who were a very small number. He besieged the citadel the same day, where Aristion, and those who had taken refuge there, were soon so much reduced by famine, that they were forced to surrender themselves. The tyrant, his guards, and all who had been in any office under him, were put to death.

Some few days after, Sylla made himself master of the Piræus, and burnt all its fortifications, especially the arsenal, which had been built by Philo, the celebrated architect, and was a wonderful fabrick. Archelaus, by the help of his fleet, had retired to Munichia, another port of Attica.

This year was fatal to the arms of Mithridates. Taxilus, one of his generals arrived in Greece from Thrace and Macedonia, with an army of a hundred thousand foot, and ten thousand horse, with four score and ten chariots armed with scythes. Archelaus, that general's brother, was at that time in the port of Munichia, and would neither remove from the sea, nor come to a battle with the Romans; but he endeavoured to protract the war, and cut off their provisions. This was very wise conduct, for Sylla began to be in want of them; so that famine obliged him to quit Attica, and to enter the fruitful plains of Boeotia, where Hortensius joined him. Their troops being united, they took possession of a fertile eminence in the midst of the plains of Elatea, at the foot of which ran a rivulet. When they had formed their camp, the enemies could discover at a view their small number, which amounted to only fifteen thousand foot, and fifteen hundred horse. This induced Archelaus's generals to press him in the warmest manner to proceed to action. They did not obtain his consent without great difficulty. They immediately bega gan to move, and covered the whole plain with horses, chariots, and their innumerable troops. For when the two brothers were joined, their army was very formidable. The noise and cries of so many nations, and so many thousands of men preparing for battle, the pomp and magnificence of their array, were equally terrible. The brightness of their armour, magnificently adorned with gold and silver, and the lively colours of the Median and Scythian coats of arms, mingled with the glitter of brass and steel, reflected a kind of rays, which, whilst they dazzled the sight, filled the soul with terror.

The Romans, seized with dread, kept close within their entrenchments. Sylla not being able by his discourse and remonstrances to remove their fear, and not being willing to force them to fight in their present universal discouragement, was obliged to lie still, and suffer, though with great impatience, the bravadoes and insulting derision of the Barbarians. They conceived so great a contempt for him in consequence, that they neglected to observe any discipline. Few of them kept within their entrenchments; the rest, for the sake of plunder, dispersed in great troops, and removed considerably, even several days journey, from the camp. They plundered and ruined some cities in the neighbourhood.

Sylla was in the last despair, when he saw the cities of the allies destroyed before his eyes, for want of power to make his army fight. He at last thought of a stratagem, which was to give the troops no repose, and to keep them incessantly at work in turning the little river Cephisus, which was near the camp, and in digging deep and large fosses, under pretence of their better security, but in effect, that when they should be tired of such great fatigues, they might prefer the hazard of a battle to the continuance of their labour. His stratagem was successful. After having worked without intermission three days, as Sylla, according to custom, was taking a view of their progress, they cried out to him with one voice to lead them them against the enemy. Sylla suffered himself to be exceedingly intreated, and did not comply for some time: But when he saw their ardour increase from his oppositions, he made them stand to their arms, and marched against the enemy.

The battle was fought near Cheronæa. The enemy had possessed themselves with a great body of troops of a very advantageous post, called Thuriæum: It was the ridge of a steep mountain, which extended itself upon the left flank of the Romans, and was very proper to check their motions. Two men of Cheronæa came to Sylla, and promised him to drive the enemy from this post, if he would give him a small number of chosen troops; which he did. In the mean time he drew up his army in battle, divided his horse between the two wings, taking the right himself, and giving the left to Murena. Galba and Hortensius formed a second line. Hortensius, on the left of it, supported Murena, whilst Galba, on the right, did the same for Sylla. The Barbarians had already begun to extend the horse, and light-armed foot, in a large compass, with design to surround the second line, and charge it in the rear.

At that instant the two men of Cheronæa, having gained the top of Thuriæum with their small troop, without being perceived by the enemy, showed themselves on a sudden. The Barbarians, surprized and terrified, immediately took to flight. Pressing against each other upon the declivity of the mountain, they ran precipitately down before the enemy, who charged and pursued them down the hill with their swords at their backs; so that about three thousand men were killed upon the mountain. Of those that escaped, some fell into the hands of Murena, who had just before formed himself in battle. Having marched against them, he intercepted, and made a great slaughter of them: The rest, who endeavoured to regain their camp, fell in upon the main body of their troops with so much precipitation, that they threw the whole army into terror and confusion, and made their generals lose much time in restoring order, which was one of the principal causes of their defeat.

M 2

Sylla, to take advantage of this disorder, marched against them with so much vigour, and passed the space between the two armies with such rapidity, that he prevented the effect of their chariots armed with scythes. The force of these chariots depended upon the length of their course, which gave impetuosity and violence to their motion; instead of which, a short space that did not leave room for their career, rendered them useless and ineffectual. This the Barbarians experienced at this time. The first chariots came on so slowly, and with so little effect, that the Romans easily pushing them back, with great noise and loud laughter called for more, as was customary at Rome in the chariot-races of the Circus.

After those chariots were removed, the two armies came to blows. The Barbarians presented their long pikes, and kept close order with their bucklers joined, so that they could not be broke; and the Romans threw down their javelins, and, with sword in hand, removed the enemies pikes, in order to join and charge them with great fury. What increased their animosity, was the sight of fifteen thousand slaves, whom the king's generals had spirited from them by the promise of their liberty, and posted amongst them the heavy-armed foot. Those slaves had so much resolution and bravery, that they sustained the shock of the Roman foot without giving way. Their battle was so deep and so well closed, that the Romans could neither break nor move them, till the light-armed foot of the second line had put them into disorder, by the discharge of their arrows, and an hail of stones from their slings, which forced them to give ground.

Archelaus having made his right wing advance to surround the left of the Romans, Hortensius led on the troops under his command to take him in flank; which which Archelaus seeing, he ordered two thousand horse to wheel about. Hortensius, upon the point of being overpowered by that great body of horse, retired by degrees towards the mountains, perceiving himself too far from the main body, and upon the point of being surrounded by the enemy. Sylla, with great part of his right wing, that had not yet engaged, marched to his relief. From the dust raised by those troops, Archelaus judged what they were, and leaving Hortensius, he turned about towards the place Sylla had quitted, in hopes he should find no difficulty in defeating the right wing without its general.

Taxilus, at the same time, led on his foot, armed with brazen shields, against Murena; whilst each side raised great cries, which made the neighbouring hills resound. Sylla halted on that noise, not knowing well to which side he should hasten. At length, he thought it most expedient to return to his former post, and support his right wing. He therefore sent Hortensius to assist Murena with four cohorts, and taking the fifth with him, he flew to his right wing, which he found engaged in battle with Archelaus, neither side having the advantage. But as soon as he appeared, that wing taking new courage from the presence of their general, opened their way through the troops of Archelaus, put them to flight, and pursued them vigorously for a considerable time.

After this great success, without losing a moment, he marched to the aid of Murena. Finding him also victorious, and that he had defeated Taxilus, he joined him in the pursuit of the vanquished. A great number of the Barbarians were killed in the plain, and a much greater cut to pieces, in endeavouring to gain their camp; so that, of many thousand men, only ten thousand escaped, who fled to the city of Chalcis. Sylla wrote in his memoirs, that only fourteen of his men were missing, and that two of them returned the same evening.
To celebrate so great a victory, he gave the Musesick-games at Thebes, and caused judges to come from the neighbouring Grecian cities to distribute the prizes; for he had an implacable aversion for the Thebans. He even deprived them of half their territory, which he consecrated to Apollo Pythius, and Jupiter Olympius, and decreed, that the money he had taken out of the temples of those gods should be repaid out of their revenues.

These games were no sooner over, than he received advice, that L. Valerius Flaccus of the adverse party (for at this time the divisions between Marius and Sylla were at the highest) had been elected consul, and had already crossed the Ionian sea with an army, in appearance against Mithridates, but in reality against himself. For this reason he began his march to Thessaly, as with design to meet him. But being arrived * at the city of Melitea, news came to him from all sides, that all the places he had left in his rear were plundered by another of the king's armies, stronger and more numerous than the first. For Dorylaus was arrived at Chalcis with a great fleet, on board of which were fourscore thousand men, the best equipped, the most warlike and disciplined of all Mithridate's troops, and had thrown himself into Boeotia, and possessed himself of the whole country, in order to bring Sylla to a battle. Archelaus would have diverted him from that design, by giving him an exact account of the battle he had so lately lost; but his counsel and remonstrances had no effect. He soon knew, that the advice he had given him, was highly reasonable and judicious.

He chose the plain of Orchomenus for the field of battle. Sylla caused fosses to be dug on each side of the plain, to deprive the enemy of the advantage of an open country, and to remove them towards the marshes. The Barbarians fell furiously on the workmen, dispersed them, and put to flight the troops that supported them. Sylla, seeing his army flying in in this manner, quitted his horse immediately, and seizing one of his ensigns, he pushed forwards towards the enemy through those that fled, crying to them, For me, Romans, I think it glorious to die here. But for you, when you shall be asked where you abandoned your general, remember to say it was at Orchomenus. They could not suffer those reproaches, and returned to the charge with such fury, that they made Archelaus's troops turn their backs. The Barbarians came on again in better order than before, and were again repulsed with greater loss.

* In Thessaly.

The next day, at sun-rise, Sylla led back his troops towards the enemy's camp, to continue his trenches, and falling upon those who were detached to skirmish and drive away the workmen, he charged them so rudely, that he put them to flight. These threw the troops, who had continued in the camp, into such terror, that they were afraid to stay to defend it. Sylla entered it pell-mell with those that fled, and made himself master of it. The marshes, in a moment, were dyed with blood, and the like filled with dead bodies. The enemies, in different attacks, lost the greatest part of their troops. Archelaus continued a great while hid in the marshes, and escaped at last to Chalcis.

The news of all these defeats threw Mithridates into great consternation. However, as that prince was by nature fruitful in resources, he did not lose courage, and applied himself to repair his losses by making new levies. But from the fear, that his ill success might give birth to some revolt or conspiracy against his person, as had already happened, he took the bloody precautions of putting all he suspected to death, without sparing even his best friends.

(o) He was not more successful in Asia himself, than his generals had been in Greece. Fimbria, who commanded a Roman army there, beat the remainder of his best troops. He pursued the vanquished as far as the gates of Pergamus, where Mithridates resided, and obliged him to quit that place himself, and retire to Pitane, a maritime place of Troas. Fimbria pursued him thither, and invested him by land. But as he had no fleet to do the same by sea, he sent to Lucullus, who cruized in the neighbouring seas with the Roman fleet, and represented to him, that he might acquire immortal glory, by seizing the person of Mithridates, who could not escape him, and by putting an end to so important a war. Fimbria and Lucullus were of two different factions. The latter would not be concerned in the affairs of the other. So that Mithridates escaped by sea to Mitylene, and extricated himself out of the hands of the Romans. This fault cost them very dear, and is not extraordinary in states, where misunderstandings subsist between the ministers and generals of the army, which make them neglect the publick good, left they should contribute to the glory of their rivals.

Lucullus afterwards beat Mithridates's fleet twice, and gained two great victories over him. This happy success was the more surprizing, as it was not expected from Lucullus to distinguish himself by military exploits. He had passed his youth in the studies of the law; and during his being quaestor in Asia, the province had always enjoyed peace. But so happy a genius as his, did not want to be taught by experience, which is not to be acquired by lessons, and is generally the growth of many years. He supplied that defect in some measure, by employing the whole time of his journey, by land and sea, partly in asking questions of persons experienced in the art of war, and partly in instructing himself by the reading of history. So that he arrived in Asia a complete general, though he left Rome with only a moderate knowledge in the art of war*. Let your young warriors warriors consider this with due attention, and observe in what manner the great form themselves.

* Ad Mithridaticum bellum onem victum omnium quae de vir- tumillis a senatu, non modo opini-sute ejus erat, sed etiam gloriam superi-

Whilst Sylla was very successful in Greece, the faction that opposed him, and at that time engrossed all power at Rome, had declared him an enemy of the commonwealth. Cinna and Carbo treated the noblest and most considerable persons with every kind of cruelty and injustice. Most of these, to avoid this insupportable tyranny, had chose to retire to Sylla's camp, as to a port of safety; so that in a small time Sylla had a little senate about him. His wife Metella, having escaped with great difficulty with her children, brought him an account, that his enemies had burnt his house, and ruined his lands, and begged him to depart immediately to the relief of those, who remained in Rome, and were upon the point of being made victims of the same fury.

Sylla was in the greatest perplexity. On the one side, the miserable condition to which his country was reduced, inclined him to march directly to its relief; on the other, he could not resolve to leave imperfect so great and important an affair as the war with Mithridates. Whilst he was under this cruel dilemma, a merchant came to him, to treat with him in secret from general Archelaus, and to make him some proposals of an accommodation. He was so exceedingly rejoiced when this man had explained his commission, that he made all possible haste to have a conference with that general.

They had an interview upon the banks of the sea, near the little city of Delium. Archelaus, who did not not know how important it was to Sylla, to have it in his power to repass into Italy, proposed to him the uniting his interest with those of Mithridates; and added that his master would supply him with money, troops, and ships, for a war against the faction of Cinna and Marius.

Sylla, without seeming offended at first with such proposals, exhorted him on his side to withdraw himself from the slavery, in which he lived, under an imperious and cruel prince. He added, that he might take upon him the title of king in his government, and offered to have him declared the ally and friend of the Roman people, if he would deliver up to him Mithridates's fleet under his command. Archelaus rejected that proposal with indignation, and even expressed to the Roman general, how much he thought himself injured by the supposition of his being capable of such a treason. Upon which Sylla, assuming the air of grandeur and dignity so natural to the Romans, said to him: "If being only a slave, "and at best but an officer of a Barbarian king, "you look upon it as a baseness to quit the service "of your master, how dared you propose the abandoning the interests of the republick to such a Roman as me? Do you imagine our condition and "affairs to be equal? Have you forgot my victories? "Do you not remember, that you are the same "Archelaus I have defeated in two battles, and "forced in the last to hide himself in the marshes of "Orchomenus?"

Archelaus, confounded by so haughty an answer, sustained himself no longer in the sequel of the ne-totiation. Sylla got the ascendant entirely, and dictating the law as victor, proposed the following conditions: "That Mithridates should renounce Asia "and Paphlagonia: That he should restore Bithynia "to Nicomedes, and Cappadocia to Ariobarzanes: "That he should pay the Romans two thousand "talents (about three hundred thousand pounds sterling) for the expences of the war, and seventy "armed armed galleys, with their whole equipage; and that Sylla, on his side, should secure to Mithridates the rest of his dominions, and cause him to be declared the friend and ally of the Roman people." Archelaus seemed to approve those conditions; and dispatched a courier immediately to communicate them to Mithridates. Sylla set out for the Hellespont, carrying Archelaus with him, whom he treated with great honours.

He received Mithridates's ambassadors at Larissa, who came to declare to him, that their master accepted and ratified all the other articles, but that he desired he would not deprive him of Paphlagonia; and that as to the seventy galleys, he could by no means comply with that article. Sylla, offended at this refusal, answered them in an angry tone: "What say you? Would Mithridates keep possession of Paphlagonia, and does he refuse me the galleys I demanded? I expected to have seen him return me thanks upon his knees, for having only left him the hand with which he butchered an hundred thousand Romans. He will change his note when I go over to Asia; though at present, in the midst of his court at Pergamus, he meditates plans for a "war he never saw." Such was the lofty style of Sylla, who gave Mithridates to understand at the same time that he would not talk such language, had he been present at the past battles.

The ambassadors, terrified with this answer, made no reply. Archelaus endeavoured to soften Sylla, and promised him, that Mithridates should consent to all the articles. He set out for that purpose, and Sylla, after having laid waste the country, returned into Macedonia.

Archelaus upon his return joined him at the city of Philippi, and informed him, that Mithridates would accept the proposed conditions; but that he exceedingely desired to have a conference with him. What made him earnest for this interview, was his fear of Fimbria, who having killed Flaccus, of whom mention tion is made before, and put himself at the head of that consul's army, advanced by great marches against Mithridates; which determined that prince to make peace with Sylla. They had an interview at Dardania, a city of Troas. Mithridates had with him two hundred gallies, twenty thousand foot, six thousand horse, and a great number of chariots armed with scythes: And Sylla had only four cohorts, and two hundred horse in his company. When Mithridates advanced to meet him, and offered him his hand, Sylla asked him, whether he accepted the proposed conditions? As the king kept silence, Sylla continued, "Do you not know, Mithridates, that it is for suppliants to speak, and for the victorious to hear and be silent?" Upon this Mithridates began a long apology, endeavouring to ascribe the cause of the war, partly to the gods, and partly to the Romans. Sylla interrupted him, and after having made a long detail of the violences and inhumanities he had committed, he demanded of him a second time, whether he would ratify the conditions Archelaus had laid before him. Mithridates, surprized at the haughtiness and steady air of the Roman general, having answered in the affirmative, Sylla then received his embraces; and afterwards presenting the kings, Ariobarzanes and Nicomedes, to him, he reconciled them to each other. Mithridates, after the delivery of the seventy gallies entirely equipped, and five hundred archers, re-embarked.

Sylla saw plainly, that this treaty of peace was highly disagreeable to his troops. They could not bear that a prince, who of all kings was the most mortal enemy to Rome, and who in one day had caused an hundred thousand Roman citizens dispersed in Asia to be put to the sword, should be treated with so much favour, and even honour, and declared the friend and ally of the Romans almost still reeking with their blood. Sylla, to justify his conduct, gave them to understand, that if he had rejected his proposals of peace, Mithridates, on his refusal, would not not have failed to treat with Fimbria; and that, if those two enemies had joined their forces, they would have obliged him either to abandon his conquests, or hazard a battle against troops, superior in number, under the command of two great captains, who in one day might have deprived him of the fruit of all his victories.

Thus ended the first war with Mithridates, which had lasted four years, and in which Sylla had destroyed more than an hundred and sixty thousand of the enemy; recovered Greece, Macedonia, Ionia, Asia, and many other provinces, of which Mithridates had possessed himself; and having deprived him of a great part of his fleet, obliged him to confine himself within the bounds of his hereditary dominions.* But what is most to be admired in Sylla is, that during three years, whilst the factions of Marius and Cinna had enslaved Italy, he did not dissemble his intending to turn his arms against them, and yet continued the war he had begun, convinced that it was necessary to conquer the foreign enemy, before he reduced and punished those at home. He was also highly laudable for his constancy in not hearkening to any proposals from Mithridates, who offered him considerable aid against his enemies, till that prince had accepted the conditions of peace he prescribed him.

Some days after, Sylla began his march against Fimbria, who was encamped under the walls of Thyatria in Lydia, and having marked out a camp near his, he began his intrenchments. Fimbria’s soldiers, who came unarmed, ran out to salute and embrace those of Sylla, and assisted them with great pleasure in forming their lines. Fimbria, seeing this change in his troops, and fearing Sylla as an irreconcilable

* Vix quidquam in Sylla operibus clarius duxerim, quam quod, cum per triennium Cinnæ Mariæ partes Italiam obfiderent, neque illaturum se bellum iis dissimulavit, nec quod erat in manibus omissit; exstitimavitque ante frangendum hostem, quam ulciscendum civem; repulsique externo metu, ubi quod alienum effet visisset, superaret quod erat donec

Vell. Paterc. 1. ii. c. 2,
able enemy from whom he could expect no mercy, after having attempted in vain to get him assassinated, killed himself.

Sylla condemned Asia in general to pay twenty thousand talents, and besides that, rifed particulars exceedingly, by abandoning their houses to the insolence and rapaciousness of his troops whom he quartered upon them, and who lived at discretion as in conquered cities. For he gave orders that every host should pay each soldier quartered upon him four drachmas a day, and entertain at table himself, and as many of his friends as he should think fit to invite; that each captain should have fifty drachmas, and besides that a robe for the house, and another when he went abroad.

(q) After having punished Asia, he set out from Ephesus with all his ships, and arrived the third day at Piræus. Having been initiated in the great mysteries, he took for his own use the library of Apellicon, in which were the works of Aristotle. That philosopher, at his death, had left his writings to Theophrastus, one of his most illustrious disciples. The latter had transferred them to Neleus of Scepsis, a city in the neighbourhood of Pergamus in Asia; after whose death those works fell into the hands of his heirs, ignorant persons, who kept them shut up in a chest. When the kings of Pergamus began to collect industriously all sorts of books for their library, as the city of Scepsis was in their dependance, those heirs, apprehending these works would be taken from them, they thought proper to hide them in a vault under ground, where they remained almost an hundred and thirty years; till the heirs of Neleus's family, which after several generations were fallen into extreme poverty, brought them out to sell to Apellicon, a rich Athenian, who fought every where after

after the most curious books for his library. As they were very much damaged by the length of time, and the damp place where they had lain, Apellicon had copies immediately taken of them, in which there were many chasms; because the originals were either rotted in many places, or worm-eaten, and obliterated. These blanks, words, and letters, were filled up as well as they could be by conjecture, and that in some places with sufficient want of judgment. From hence arose the many difficulties in those works, which have ever since divided the learned world. Apellicon being dead some small time before Sylla's arrival at Athens, he seized upon his library, and with these works of Aristotle, which he found in it, enriched his own at Rome. A famous grammarian of those times, named Tyrannion, who lived then at Rome, having a great desire for these works of Aristotle, obtained permission from Sylla's librarian to take a copy of them. That copy was communicated to Andronicus the Rhodian, who afterwards imparted it to the publick: The world is obliged to him for the works of that great philosopher.

SECT. II. Second war against Mithridates, under Murena, of only three years duration. Mithridates prepares to renew the war. He concludes a treaty with Sertorius. Third war with Mithridates. Lucullus consul sent against him. He obliges him to raise the siege of Cyzicum, and defeats his troops. He gains a compleat victory over him, and reduces him to fly into Pontus. Tragical end of the sisters and wives of Mithridates. He endeavours to retire to Tigranes his son-in-law. Lucullus regulates the affairs of Asia.

SYLLA, on setting out for Rome, had left the government of Asia to Murena, with the two legions that had served under Fimbria, to keep the province in obedience. This Murena is the father father of him, for whom Cicero made the fine oration, which bears his name. His son at this time made his first campaigns under him.

( Appian. p. 213——216.)

After Sylla's departure, Mithridates being returned into Pontus, marched his army against the people of Colchis and the Bosporus, who had revolted against him. The first demanded his son Mithridates for their king, and having obtained him, immediately returned to their duty. The king, imagining their conduct to proceed from his son's intrigues, took umbrage at it, and having caused him to come to him, he ordered him to be bound with chains of gold, and soon after put him to death. That son had done him great services in the war against Fimbria. We see here a new instance of the jealousy, which the excessive love of power is apt to incite, and to what an height the prince, who abandons himself to it, is capable of carrying his suspicions against his own blood; always ready to proceed to the most fatal extremities, and to sacrifice whatever is dearest to him to the slightest distrust. As for the inhabitants of the Bosporus, he prepared a great fleet and a numerous army, which gave reason to believe, his designs were against the Romans. He had not indeed restored all Cappadocia to Ariobarzanes, but reserved part of it in his own hands, and he began to suspect Archelaus, as having engaged him in a peace equally shameful and disadvantageous.

When Archelaus perceived it, well knowing the master he had to deal with, he took refuge with Murena, and solicited him warmly to turn his arms against Mithridates. Murena, who passionately desired to obtain the honour of a triumph, suffered himself to be easily persuaded. He made an irruption into Cappadocia, and made himself master of Comana, the most powerful city of that kingdom. Mithridates sent ambassadors to him to complain of his violating the treaty the Romans had made with him. Murena replied, that he knew of no treaty made with their master. There was, in reality, nothing reduced to writing on Sylla's part, the whole having passed by verbal agreement. In consequence he continued to ravage the country, and took up his winter-quarters in it. Mithridates sent ambassadors to Rome, to make his complaints to Sylla and the senate.

There came a commissioner from Rome, but without a decree of the senate, who publickly ordered Murena not to molest the king of Pontus. But as they conferred together in private, this was looked upon as a mere collusion. And indeed Murena perfisted in ravaging his country. Mithridates therefore took the field, and having passed the river Halys, gave Murena battle, defeated him, and obliged him to retire into Phrygia with very great loss.

Sylla, who had been appointed dictator, not being able to suffer any longer that Mithridates, contrary to the treaty he had granted him, should be disquieted, sent Gabinius to Murena to order him in earnest to desist from making war with that prince, and to reconcile him with Ariobarzanes. He obeyed. Mithridates, having put one of his sons of only four years old into the hands of Ariobarzanes as an hostage, under that pretext retained the cities, in which he had garrisons, promising no doubt to restore them in time. He then gave a feast, in which he promised prizes for such as should excel the rest in drinking, eating, singing, and railing: Fit object of emulation! Gabinius was the only one, who did not think proper to enter these lists. Thus ended the second war with Mithridates, which lasted only three years. Murena, at his return to Rome, received the honour of a triumph, to which his pretensions were but indifferent.

Mithridates at length restored Cappadocia to Ariobarzanes, forced by Sylla, who died the same year. But he contrived a stratagem to deprive him entirely of it. Tigranes had lately built a great city in Armenia, which, from his own name, he called Tigranocerta. Mithridates persuade his son-in-law to conquer Cappadocia, and to transport the inhabitants into the new city, and the other parts of his dominions, that were not well peopled. He did so, and took away three hundred thousand souls. From thenceforth, wherever he carried his victorious arms, he acted in the same manner for the better peopling of his own dominions.

(x) The extraordinary reputation of Sertorius, who had given the Romans terrible employment in Spain, made Mithridates conceive the thought of sending an embassy to him, in order to engage him to join forces against the common enemy. The flatterers, who compared him to Pyrrhus, and Sertorius to Hannibal, infinuated, that the Romans, attacked at the same time on different sides, could never be able to oppose two such formidable powers, when the most able and experienced of generals should act in concert with the greatest of kings. He therefore sent ambassadors to Spain, with letters and instructions for treating with Sertorius, to whom they offered, in his name, a fleet and money to carry on the war, upon condition that he would suffer that prince to recover the provinces of Asia, which the necessity of his affairs had reduced him to abandon, by the treaty he had made with Syila.

As soon as those ambassadors arrived in Spain, and had opened their commission to Sertorius, he assembled his council, which he called the senate. They were unanimously of opinion, to accept that prince's offers with joy, and the rather, because so immediate and an effective an aid, as the offered fleet and money, would cost him only a vain consent to an enterprize, which it did not in any manner depend upon him to prevent. But Sertorius, with a truly Roman greatness of soul, protested, that he would never consent to any treaty, injurious to the glory or interest of his country; and that he could desire no victory from his own enemies, that was not acquired by just and honourable methods. And having made Mithridates's ambassadors come into the assembly, he de-declared to them, that he would suffer his master to keep Bithynia and Cappadocia, which were accustomed to be governed by kings, and of which the Romans could pretend to no just right to dispose; but he would never consent he should have any footing in Asia minor, which appertained to the republick, and which he had renounced by a solemn treaty.

When this answer was related to Mithridates, it struck him with amazement; and he is affirmed to have said to his friends, "What orders may we not expect from Sertorius, when he shall sit in the senate in the midst of Rome; who, even now, confined upon the coast of the Atlantick ocean, dictates bounds to our dominions, and declares war against us, if we undertake any thing against Asia?" A treaty was however concluded, and sworn between them to this effect: That Mithridates should have Bithynia and Cappadocia; that Sertorius should send his troops for that purpose, and one of his captains to command them; and that Mithridates, on his side, should pay Sertorius three thousand talents down, and give him forty gallies.

The captain sent by Sertorius into Asia was a banished senator of Rome, who had taken refuge with him, named Marcus Marius, to whom Mithridates paid great honours. For when Marius entered the cities, preceded by the fasces and axes, Mithridates followed him, well satisfied with the second place, and with only making the figure of a powerful, but inferior, ally, in this proconsul's company. Such was at that time the Roman greatness, that the name alone of that potent republick obscured the splendor and power of the greatest kings. Mithridates, however, found his interest in this conduct. Marius, as authorized by the Roman people and senate, discharged most of the cities from paying the exorbitant taxes Sylla had imposed on them; expressly declared, that it was from Sertorius they received, and

About four hundred and fifty thousand pounds.
and to whom they were indebted for that favour. So moderate and politick a conduct opened the gates of the cities to him without the help of arms, and the name of Sertorius alone made more conquests than all the forces of Mithridates.

(y) Nicomedes, king of Bithynia, died this year, and made the Roman people his heirs. His country became thereby, as I have observed elsewhere, a province of the Roman empire. Mithridates immediately formed a resolution to renew the war against them upon this occasion, and employed the greatest part of the year in making the necessary preparations for carrying it on with vigour. He believed, that after the death of Sylla, and during the troubles with which the republick was agitated, the conjuncture was favourable for re-entering upon the conquests he had given up.

(z) Instructed by his misfortunes and experience, he banished from his army all armour adorned with gold and jewels, which he began to consider as the allurement of the victor, and not as the strength of those who wore them. He caused swords to be forged after the Roman fashion, with solid and weighty bucklers; he collected horses, rather well made and broke, than magnificently adorned: Assembled an hundred and twenty thousand foot, armed and disciplined like the Roman infantry, and sixteen thousand horse well equipped for service, besides an hundred chariots armed with long scythes, and drawn by four horses. He also fitted out a considerable number of gallys, which glittered no longer, as before with gilt pavilions, but were filled with all sorts of arms offensive and defensive, and well provided with sums of money for the pay and subsistence of the troops.

Mithridates had begun by seizing Paphlagonia and Bithynia. The province of Asia, which found itself exhausted by the exaction of the Roman tax-farmers and usurers, to deliver themselves from their oppression, declared a second time for him. Such was the cause of the third Mithridatick war which subsisted almost twelve years.

The two consuls, Lucullus and Cotta, were sent against him, each of them with an army under him. Lucullus had Asia, Cilicia and Cappadocia for his province; the other Bithynia and Propontis.

Whilst Lucullus was employed in reforming the rapaciousness and violence of the farmers and usurers, and in reconciling the people of the countries, through which he passed, by giving them good hopes for the time to come; Cotta, who was already arrived, thought he had a favourable opportunity, in the absence of his colleague, to signalize himself by some great exploit. He therefore prepared to give Mithridates battle. The more he was told, that Lucullus approached, that he was already in Phrygia, and would soon arrive, the greater haste he made to fight, believing himself already assured of a triumph, and desirous of preventing his colleague from having any share in it. But he was beaten by sea and land. In the naval battle he lost sixty of his ships with their whole complements; and in that by land he had four thousand of his best troops killed, and was obliged to shut himself up in the city of Chalcedon, with no other hope of any other relief but what his colleague should think fit to give him. All the officers of his army, enraged at Cotta's rash and presumptuous conduct, endeavoured to periuade Lucullus to enter Pontus, which Mithridates had left without troops, and where he might assure himself of finding the people inclined to revolt. He answered generously, that he would always esteem it more glorious to preserve a Roman citizen, than to possess himself of the whole dominions of an enemy; and without resentment against his colleague, he marched to assist him with all the success he could have hoped. This was the first action by which he distinguished himself, and which ought to do him more honour than the most splendid victories.
Mithridates, encouraged by the double advantage he had gained, undertook the siege of Cyzicum, a city of Propontis, which strenuously supported the Roman party in this war. In making himself master of this place, he would have opened himself a passage from Bithynia into Asia minor, which would have been very advantageous, in giving him an opportunity of carrying the war thither with all possible ease and security. It was for this reason he desired to take it. In order to succeed, he invested it by land with three hundred thousand men, divided in ten camps; and by sea with four hundred ships. Lucullus soon followed him thither, and began, by seizing a post upon an eminence of the last importance to him, because it facilitated his receiving convoys, and gave him the means of cutting off the enemy's provisions. He had only thirty thousand foot, and two thousand five hundred horse. The superiority of the enemy in number, far from dismaying, encouraged him; for he was convinced, that so innumerable a multitude would soon be in want of provisions. Hence, in haranguing his troops, he promised them in a few days a victory, that would not cost them a single drop of blood. It was in that he placed his glory; for the lives of the soldiers were dear to him.

The siege was long, and carried on with extreme vigour. Mithridates battered the place on all sides with innumerable machines. The defence was no less vigorous. The besieged did prodigies of valour, and employed all means, that the most industrious capacity could invent, to repulse the enemy's attacks, either by burning their machines, or rendering them useless by a thousand obstacles they opposed to them. What inspired them with so much courage, was their exceeding confidence in Lucullus, who had let them know, that if they continued to defend themselves with the same valour, the place would not be taken.

Lucullus was indeed so well posted, that without coming to a general action, which he always carefully avoided, he made Mithridates's army suffer infinitely, by intercepting his convoys, charging his foraging parties with advantage, and beating the detachments he sent out from time to time. In a word, he knew so well how to improve all occasions that offered, he weakened the army of the besiegers so much, and used such address in cutting off their provisions, having shut up all avenues by which they might be supplied, that he reduced them to extreme famine. The soldiers could find no other food but the herbage, and some went so far, as to support themselves upon human flesh. Mithridates*, who passed for the most artful captain of his times, in despair, that a general, who could not have had much experience, should so often put the change upon him by false marches, and feigned movements, and had defeated him without drawing his sword, was at length obliged to raise the siege shamefully, after having spent almost two years before the place. He fled by sea, and his lieutenants retired with his army by land to Nicomedia. Lucullus pursued them, and having come up with them near the Granicus, he killed twenty thousand of them upon the spot, and took an infinite number of prisoners. It was said, that in this war there perished almost three hundred thousand men, soldiers, and servants, with other followers of the army.

\[ Plut. in Lucul. p. 497-499. \] \[ Appian. p. 219-222. \]

After this new success, Lucullus returned to Cyzicum, entered the city, and after having enjoyed for some days the pleasure of having preserved it, and the honours consequential of that success, he made a swift tour upon the coasts of the Hellespont, to collect ships and form a fleet.

\[N \ 4\]

Mithridates\[*\] Cum totius impetus belli ad Cyzicenorum monia contitisset, eamque urbem sibi Mithridates Aflar januam fore putavitset, qua effraetia & revulsa tota pateret provincia : perfetia ab Lucullo haste suntomnia, ut urbs fidelissimorum sociorum defendentur, ut omnes copiae regis diuturnitate obfodionis consumeinatur. Cic. in Orat. pro Mur. n. 53.
Mithridates, after having raised the siege of Cyzicum, repaired to Nicomedia, from whence he passed by sea into Pontus. He left part of his fleet, and ten thousand men of his best troops, in the Hellespont, under three of his most able generals. Lucullus, with the Roman fleet *, beat them twice; the first time at Tenedos, and the other at Lemnos, when the enemy thought of nothing less than making sail for Italy, and of alarming and plundering the coasts of Rome itself. He killed almost all their men in those two engagements; and in the last took M. Marius the Roman senator, whom Sertorius had sent from Spain to the aid of Mithridates. Lucullus ordered him to be put to death, because it was not consistent with the Roman dignity, that a senator of Rome should be led in triumph. One of the two others poisoned himself; and the third was reserved for the triumph. After having cleared the coasts by these two victories, Lucullus turned his arms towards the continent: Reduced Bithynia first, then Paphlagonia; marched afterwards into Pontus, and carried the war into the heart of Mithridates's dominions.

He suffered at first so great a want of provisions in this expedition, that he was obliged to make thirty thousand Galatians follow the army, each with a quantity of wheat upon his shoulders. But upon his advancing into the country, and subduing the cities and provinces, he found such abundance of all things, that an ox sold for only one drachma, and a slave for no more than four.

Mithridates had suffered almost as much by the tempest, in his passage on the Euxine sea, as in the campaign wherein he had been treated so roughly. He

---

* Ab eodem imperatore cladem magnum & ornatum, qua ducibus Sertorianis ad Italiano studio inflammatum rapereatur, superatam esse atque depressam. Cic. pro leg. Manil. n. 21.

Quid? Illam pugnam navalem ad Tenedum, cum tanto concurris, acerrimis ducibus, hostium classis Italianae sse atque animis inflata petet, mediocri certamine & parva dimicatione commissem arbitratis? Id. pro Murania, n. 33.
He lost in it almost all the remainder of his fleet, and the troops he had brought thither for the defence of his ancient dominions. When Lucullus arrived, he was making new levies with the utmost expedition, to defend himself against that invasion, which he had foreseen.

Lucullus, upon arriving in Pontus, without loss of time besiegéd Amisus and Eupatoria, two of the principal cities of the country, very near each other. The latter, which had been very lately built, was called Rupatoria, from the surname of Eupator, given to Mithridates; this place was his usual residence, and he designed to make it the capital of his dominions. Not contented with these two sieges at once, he sent a detachment of his army to form that of Themiscyra, upon the river Thermodon, which place was not less considerable than the two others.

The officers of Lucullus's army complained, that their general amused himself too long in sieges, which were not worth his trouble, and that in the mean time he gave Mithridates opportunity to augment his army, and gather strength. To which he answered in his justification: "That is directly what I want. I act in this manner for no other purpose, in order that our enemy may take new courage, and assemble so numerous an army, as may embolden him to expect us in the field, and fly no longer before us. Do you not observe, that he has behind him immense solitudes and infinite desarts, in which it will be impossible for us either to come up with or pursue him? Armenia is but a few days march from these desarts. There Tigranes keeps his court, that king of kings, whose power is so great, that he subdueds the Parthians, transports whole cities of Greeks into the heart of Media, has made himself master of Syria and Palestine, exterminated the kings descended from Seleucus, and carried their wives and daughters into captivity. This powerful prince is the ally and son-in-law of Mithridates. Do you think, when when he has him in his palace as a suppliant, that he will abandon him, and not make war against us? Hence in hastening to drive away Mithridates, we shall be in great danger of drawing Tigranes upon our hands, who has long sought for pretexts for declaring against us, and who can never find one more specious, legitimate, and honourable, than that of assisting his father-in-law, and a king reduced to the last extremity. Why therefore should we serve Mithridates against ourselves, or shew him to whom he should have recourse for the means of supporting the war with us, by pushing him, against his will, and at a time perhaps when he looks upon such a step as unworthy his valour and greatness, into the arms and protection of Tigranes? Is it not infinitely better, by giving him time to take courage, and strengthen himself with his own forces, to have only upon our hands the troops of Colchis, the Tibarenians, and Cappadocians, whom we have so often defeated, than to expose ourselves to have the additional force of the Armenians and Medes to contend with?

Whilst the Romans attacked the three places we have mentioned, Mithridates, who had already formed a new army, took the field very early in the spring. Lucullus left the command of the sieges of Amisus and Eupatoria to Murena, the son of him we have spoken of before, whom Cicero represents in a very favourable light. * He went into Asia, a province abounding with riches and pleasures, where he left behind no traces either of avarice or luxury. He behaved in such a manner in this important war, that he did many great actions without the general, the general none without him." Lucullus marched against Mithridates, who lay encamped in the plains of Cabiræ. The latter had the advantage in two actions, but was entirely defeated in the third, and obliged to fly without either servant or equerry to attend him, or a single horse of his stable. It was not till very late, that one of his eunuchs, seeing him on foot in the midst of the flying crowd, got from his horse and gave it him. The Romans were so near him, that they almost had him in their hands, and it was owing entirely to themselves that they did not take him. The avarice only of the soldiers lost them a prey, which they had pursued so long, through so many toils, dangers, and battles, and deprived Lucullus of the sole reward of all his victories. Mithridates, says * Cicero, artfully imitated the manner in which Medea escaped the pursuit of her father, in the same kingdom of Pontus. That prince is said to have cut the body of Abysyttus her brother in pieces, and to have scattered his limbs in the places through which her father pursued her; in order that his care in taking up those dispersed members, and the grief so sad a spectacle would give him, might stop the rapidity of his pursuit. Mithridates in like manner, as he fled, left upon the way a great quantity of gold, silver, and precious effects, which had either descended to him from his ancestors, or had been amassed by himself in the preceding war: And whilst the soldiers employed themselves in gathering those treasures too attentively, the king escaped their hands. So that the father of Medea was stopped in his pursuit by sorrow, but the Romans by joy.

* Asian istam; refertam & cædem delicatam, sic obiit, ut in ea neque avaritiam, neque luxuriam vestigium reliquerit. Maximo in bello sic est versatus, ut hic multas res & magnas sine imperatore geferit, nullam sine hoc imperatore. * Cis. pro Mur. n. 20.

After this defeat of the enemy, Lucullus took the city city of Cabiræ, with several other places and castles, in which he found great riches. He found also the prisons full of Greeks, and princes nearly related to the king, who were confined in them. As those unhappy persons had long given themselves over for dead, the liberty they received from Lucullus seemed less a deliverance, than new life to them. In one of these castles a sister of the king's, named Nyssa, was also taken, which was a great instance of her good fortune. For the other sisters of that prince, with his wives, who had been sent farther from the danger, and who believed themselves in safety and repose, all died miserably, Mithridates on his flight having sent them orders to die by Bacchidas the eunuch.

Amongst the other sisters of the king were Roxana and Statira, both unmarried, and about forty years of age, with two of his wives, Berenice and Monima, both of Ionia. All Greece spoke much of the latter, whom they admired more for her wisdom than beauty, though exquisit. The king having fallen desperately in love with her, had forgot nothing that might incline her to favour his passion: He sent her at once fifteen thousand pieces of gold. She was always averse to him, and refused his presents, till he gave her the quality of wife and queen, and sent her the royal tiara or diadem, an essential ceremony in the marriage of the kings of those nations. Nor did she then comply without extreme regret, and in compliance with her family, dazzled with the splendor of a crown, and the power of Mithridates, who was at that time victorious, and at the height of his glory. From her marriage to the instant of which we are now speaking, that unfortunate princess had passed her life in continual sadness and affliction, lamenting her fatal beauty, that instead of a husband had given her a master, and of procuring her an honourable abode, and the endearments of conjugal society, had confined her in a close prison, under a guard of Barbarians; where, far removed from the delight-delightful regions of Greece, she had only enjoyed a dream of the happiness with which she had been flatterted, and had really lost that solid and essential good she possessed in her own beloved country.

When Bacchidas arrived, and had signified to the princesses the order of Mithridates, which favoured them no farther, than to leave them at liberty to choose the kind of death they should think most gentle and immediate; Monima, taking the diadem from her head, tied it round her neck, and hung herself up by it. But that wreath not being strong enough, and breaking, she cried out; _Ab fatal triflę, you might at least do me this mournful office!_ Then throwing it away with indignation, she presented her neck to Bacchidas.

As for Berenice she took a cup of poison, and as she was going to drink it, her mother, who was present, desired to share it with her. They accordingly drank both together. The half of that cup sufficed to carry off the mother, worn out and feeble with age; but was not enough to surmount the strength and youth of Berenice. That princess struggled long with death in the most violent agonies, till Bacchidas, tired with waiting the effects of the poison, ordered her to be strangled.

Of the two sisters, Roxana is said to have swallowed poison, venting a thousand reproaches and imprecations against Mithridates. Statira, on the contrary, was pleased with her brother, and thanked him, that being in so great danger for his own person, he had not forgot them, and taken care to supply them with the means of dying free, and of withdrawing from the indignities their enemies might else have made them suffer.

Their deaths extremely afflicted Lucullus, who was of a gentle and humane disposition. He continued his march in pursuit of Mithridates: But have-ing received advice, that he was four days journey before him, and had taken the route of Armenia, to retire to his son-in-law, he returned directly, and after having having subjected some countries, and taken some cities in the neighbourhood, he sent Appius Clodius to Tigranes, to demand Mithridates of him; and in the mean time returned against Amisus, which place was not yet taken. Callimachus, who commanded in it, and was the most able engineer of his times, had alone prolonged the siege. When he saw that he could hold out no longer, he set fire to the city, and escaped in a ship that waited for him. Lucullus did his utmost to extinguish the flames, but in vain; and, to increase his concern, saw himself obliged to abandon the city to be plundered by the soldiers, from whom the place had as much to fear as from the flames themselves. His troops were insatiable for booty, and he not capable of restraining them. A rain that happened to fall preserved a great number of buildings, and Lucullus, before his departure, caused those which had been burnt to be rebuilt. This city was an ancient colony of the Athenians. Such of the Athenians, during Aristion's being master of Athens, as desired to fly from his tyranny, had retired thither, and enjoyed there the same rights and privileges with the natives.

Lucullus, when he left Amisus, directed his march towards the cities of Asia, whom the avarice and cruelty of the usurers and tax-farmers, held under the most dreadful oppression; insomuch that those poor people were obliged to sell their children of both sexes, and even set up to auction the paintings and statues consecrated to the gods. And when these would not suffice to pay the duties, taxes, and interest unpaid, they were given up without mercy to their creditors, and often exposed to such barbarous tortures, that slavery, in comparison with their miseries, seemed a kind of redress and tranquillity to them.

These immense debts of the province arose from the fine of twenty thousand * talents, which Sylla had imposed on it. They had already paid the sum twice over: But those insatiable usurers, by heaping interest interest upon interest, had run it up to an hundred and twenty thousand * talents; so that they still owed triple the sums they had already paid.

* About three millions sterling.

Tacitus † has reason to say, that usury was one of the most ancient evils of the Roman commonwealth, and the most frequent cause of sedition; but at the time we now speak of, it was carried to an excess not easy to comprehend.

The interest of money amongst the Romans was paid every month, and was one per cent. hence it was called usura centemiss, or unciarum fænis; because in reckoning the twelve months, twelve per cent. was paid: Unica is the twelfth part of an whole.

(e) The ‡ law of the twelve tables prohibited the raising interest to above twelve per cent. This law was revived by the two tribunes of the people, in the 396th year of Rome.

(f) Ten years after, interest was reduced to half that sum, in the 406th year of Rome; semiunciarum fænis.

(g) At length, in the 411th year of Rome, all interest was prohibited by decree: Nè fænerari liceret.

All these decrees were ineffectual. || Avarice was always too strong for the laws: And whatever regulations were made to suppress it, either in the time of the republick, or under the emperors, it always found means to elude them. Nor has it paid more regard to the laws of the church, which has never entered into any composition in this point, and severely condemns all usury, even the most moderate; because, God having forbade any, she never believed she had a right to permit it in the least. It is remarkable, that usury has always occasioned the ruin of the states where it has been tolerated; and it was this disorder

(e) Tacit. Annal. l. vi. c. 16. Liv. l. vii. n. 16. (f) Liv. l. vii. n. 27. (g) Ibid. n. 42.
* About eighteen millions sterling.
† Sanè vetus urbi fœnebre magnum, & seditionum discordiarum-que creberrima causa. Tacit. Annal. l. vi. c. 16.
‡ Nequis unciario fœnore am-order which contributed very much to subvert the constitution of the Roman commonwealth, and gave birth to the greatest calamities in all the provinces of that empire.

Lucullus, at this time, applied himself in giving the province of Asia some relaxation, which he could only effect by putting a stop to the injustice and cruelty of the usurers and tax-farmers. The latter, finding themselves deprived by Lucullus of the immense gain they made, raised a great outcry, as if they had been excessively injured, and by the force of money animated many orators against him; particularly confiding in having most of those who governed the republick in their debt, which gave them a very extensive and almost unbounded influence. But Lucullus despised their clamours with a constancy the more admirable, from its being very uncommon.

Sect. III. Lucullus causes war to be declared with Tigranes, and marches against him. Vanity and ridiculous self-sufficiency of that prince. He loses a great battle. Lucullus takes Tigranocerta, capital of Armenia. He gains a second victory over the joint forces of Tigranes and Mithridates. Mutiny and revolt in the army of Lucullus.

A.M. (b) Tigranes, to whom Lucullus had sent an ambassador, though of no great power in the beginning of his reign, had enlarged it so much by a series of successes, of which there are few examples, that he was commonly surnamed the king of kings. After having overthrown, and almost ruined the family of the kings, successors of Seleucus the Great; after having very often humbled the pride of the Parthians, transported whole cities of Greeks into Media, conquered all Syria and Palestine, and given laws to the Arabians, called Scænites; he reigned with an authority respected by all the princes of Asia. The people paid him honours, after the manner of the East, even to adoration. His pride was inflamed and supported by the immense riches he possessed, by the excessive and continual praises of his flatterers, and by a prosperity that had never known any irruption.

Appius Clodius was introduced to an audience of this prince, who appeared with all the splendor he could display, in order to give the ambassador an higher idea of the royal dignity; who, on his side, uniting the haughtiness of his disposition with that which particularly characterized his republick, perfectly supported the dignity of a Roman ambassador.

After having explained, in a few words, the subjects of complaints which the Romans had against Mithridates, and that prince's breach of faith in breaking the peace, without so much as attempting to give any reason or colour for it; he told Tigranes, that he came to demand his being delivered up to him, as due by every sort of title to Lucullus's triumph; that he did not believe, as a friend to the Romans, which he had been till then, that he would make any difficulty in giving up Mithridates; and that in case of his refusal, he was instructed to declare war against him.

That prince, who had never been contradicted, and who knew no other law nor rule but his will and pleasure, was extremely offended at this Roman freedom. But he was much more so with Lucullus's letter, when it was delivered to him. The title of king only, which it gave him, did not satisfy him. He had assumed that of king of kings, of which he was very fond, and had carried his pride in that respect so far, as to cause himself to be served by crowned heads. He never appeared in publick without having four kings attending him; two on foot, on each side of his horse, when he went abroad: At table, in his chamber, in short, every where he had always some of them to do the lowest offices for him; but especially when he gave audience to ambassadors. For at that time, to give strangers a greater idea of his glory and power, he made them all stand in two ranks, one on each side.
of his throne, where they appeared in the habit and posture of common slaves. A pride so full of absurdity offends all the world. One more refined shocks less, though much the same at bottom.

It is not surprizing that a prince of this character should bear the manner in which Clodius spoke to him with impatience. It is the first free and sincere speech he had heard, during the five-and-twenty years he had governed his subjects, or rather tyrannized over them with excessive insolence. He answered, that Mithridates was the father of Cleopatra his wife; that the union between them was of too strict a nature, to admit his delivering him up for the triumph of Lucullus; and that if the Romans were unjust enough to make war against him, he knew how to defend himself, and to make them repent it. To express his resentment by his answer, he directed it only to Lucullus, without adding the usual title of Emperor, or any others commonly given to the Roman generals.

Lucullus, when Clodius reported his commission, and that war had been declared against Tigranes, returned with the utmost diligence into Pontus to begin it. The enterprise seemed rash, and the terrible power of the king astonished all those, who relied less upon the valor of the troops and the conduct of the general, than upon a multitude of soldiers. After having made himself master of Sinope, he gave that place its liberty, as he did also to Amisus, and made them both free and independent cities. (i) Cotta did not treat Heraclea, which he took after a long siege by treachery, in the same manner. He enriched himself out of its spoils, treated the inhabitants with excessive cruelty, and burnt almost the whole city. On his return to Rome, he was at first well received by the senate, and honoured with the surname of Ponticus, upon account of taking that place. But soon after, when the Heracleans had laid their complaints before the senate, and represented, in a manner capable of moving moving the hardest hearts, the miseries Cotta's avarice and cruelty had made them suffer, the senate contented themselves with depriving him of the latus clavus, which was the robe worn by the senators, a punishment in no wise proportioned to the crying excesses proved upon him.

(i) Memn. c. II. lxxi.

Lucullus left Sornatius, one of his generals, in Pontus, with six thousand men, and marched with the rest, which amounted only to twelve thousand foot, and three thousand horse, through Cappadocia to the Euphrates. He passed that river in the midst of winter, and afterwards the Tigris, and came before Tigranocerta, which was at some small distance, to attack Tigranes in his capital, where he had lately arrived from Syria. Nobody dared speak to that prince of Lucullus and his march, after his cruel treatment of the person that brought him the first news of it, whom he put to death in reward for so important a service. He listened to nothing but the discourses of flatterers, who told him Lucullus must be a great captain, if he only dared wait for him at Ephesus, and did not betake himself to flight and abandon Asia, when he saw the many thousands, of which his army was composed. So true it is, says Plutarch, that as all constitutions are not capable of bearing much wine, all minds are not suited to bearing great fortunes without loss of reason and infatuation.

Tigranes, at first, had not deigned so much as to see or speak to Mithridates, though his father-in-law, but treated him with the utmost contempt and arrogance, kept him at a distance, and placed a guard over him as a prisoner of state, in marshy unwholesome places. But after Clodius's embassy, he had ordered him to be brought to court with all possible honours and marks of respect. In a private conversation which they had together without witnesses, they cured themselves of their mutual suspicions, to the great misfortune of their friends, upon whom they cast all the blame.

O 2
In the number of those unfortunates was Metrodorus, of the city of Scephis, a man of extraordinary merit, who had so much credit with the king, that he was called the king's father. That prince had sent him on an embassy to Tigranes, to desire aid against the Romans. When he had explained the occasion of his journey, Tigranes asked him; And for you, Metrodorus, what would you advise me to do, in regard to your master's demands? Upon which Metrodorus replied, out of an excess of ill-timed sincerity: As an ambassador, I advise you to do what Mithridates demands of you; but as your counsel, not to do it. This was a criminal prevarication, and a kind of treason. It cost him his life, when Mithridates had been apprized of it by Tigranes.

Lucullus continually advanced against that prince, and was already in a manner at the gates of his palace, without his either knowing or believing any thing of the matter, so much was he blinded by his presumption. Mithrobarzanes, one of his favourites, ventured to carry him that news. The reward he had for it, was to be charged with a commission, to go immediately with some troops, and bring Lucullus prisoner; as if the question had been only to arrest one of the king's subjects. The favourite, with the greatest part of the troops given him, lost their lives, in endeavouring to execute that dangerous commission. This ill success opened the eyes of Tigranes, and made him recover from his infatuation. Mithridates had been sent back into Pontus with ten thousand horse, to raise troops there, and to return and join Tigranes, in case Lucullus entered Armenia. For himself, he had chosen to continue at Tigranocerta, in order to give the necessary orders for raising troops throughout his whole dominions. After this check he began to be afraid of Lucullus, quitted Tigranocerta, retired to mount Taurus, and gave orders for all his troops to repair thither to him.

Lucullus marched directly to Tigranocerta, took up his quarters around the place, and formed the
This city was full of all sorts of riches; the inhabitants of all orders and conditions having emulated each other in contributing to its embellishment and magnificence, in order to make their court to the king: For this reason Lucullus pressed the siege with the utmost vigour; believing that Tigranes would never suffer it to be taken, and that he would come on in a transport of fury to offer him battle, and oblige him to raise the siege. And he was not mistaken in his conjecture. Mithridates sent every day couriers to Tigranes, and wrote him letters, to advise him, in the strongest terms, not to hazard a battle, and only to make use of his cavalry in cutting off Lucullus's provisions. Taxilus himself was sent by him with the same instructions, who staying with him in his camp, made earnest instances to him, every day, not to attack the Roman armies, as they were excellently disciplined, veteran soldiers, and almost invincible.

At first he hearkened to this advice with patience enough. But when his troops, consisting of a great number of different nations, were assembled, not only the king's feals, but his councils resounded with nothing but vain bravadoes, full of insolence, pride, and barbarian menaces. Taxilus was in danger of being killed, for having ventured to oppose the advice of those who were for a battle; and Mithridates himself was openly accused of opposing it, only out of envy, to deprive his son-in-law of the glory of so great a success.

In this conceit Tigranes determined to wait no longer, left Mithridates should arrive, and share with him in the honour of the victory. He therefore marched with all his forces, telling his friends, that he was only sorry on one account, and that was, his having to do with Lucullus alone, and not with all the Roman generals together. He measured his hopes of success by the number of his troops. He had about twenty thousand archers and slingers, fifty-five thousand horse, seventeen thousand of which were heavy-armed cavalry, an hundred and fifty thousand foot, divided into companies and battalions, besides workmen to clear the the roads, build bridges, cleanse and turn the course of rivers, with other labourers necessary in armies, to the number of thirty-five thousand, who, drawn up in battle behind the combatants, made the army appear still more numerous, and augmented its force and his confidence.

When he had passed mount Taurus, and all his troops appeared together in the plains, the sight alone of his army was sufficient to strike terror into the most daring enemy. Lucullus, always intrepid, divided his troops. He left Murena with six thousand foot before the place, and with all the rest of his infantry, consisting of twenty-four cohorts, which together did not amount to more than ten or twelve thousand men, all his horse, and about a thousand archers and slingers, marched against Tigranes, and encamped in the plain, with a large river in his front.

This handful of men made Tigranes laugh, and supplied his flatterers with great matter for pleasantry. Some openly jested upon them; others, by way of diversion, drew lots for their spoils; and of all Tigranes's generals, and the kings in his army, there was not one who did not intreat him to give the charge of that affair to him alone, and content himself with being only a spectator of the action. Tigranes himself, to appear agreeable, and a fine rallier, used an expression, which has been much admired; If they come as ambassadors, they are a great many; but if as enemies, very few. Thus the first day passed in jesting and raillery.

The next morning, at sun-rise, Lucullus made his army march out of their entrenchments. That of the Barbarians was on the other side of the river towards the East, and the river ran in such a manner, that a little below it turned off to the left towards the West, where it was easily fordable. Lucullus, in leading his army to this ford, inclined also to the left, towards the lower part of the river, hastening his march. Tigranes, who saw him, believed he fled; and calling for Taxilus, told him with a contemptuous laugh—Do you see those invincible Roman legions?
gions? You see they can run away. Taxilus replied, I wish your majesty's good fortune may this day do a miracle in your favour; but the arms and march of those legions do not argue people running away.

Taxilus was still speaking, when he saw the eagle of the first legions move on a sudden to the right about, by the command of Lucullus, followed by all the cohorts, in order to pass the river. Tigranes, recovering then with difficulty, like one that had been long drunk, cried out two or three times, How! Are those people coming to us! They came on so fast, that his numerous troops did not post themselves, nor draw up in battle without abundance of disorder and confusion. Tigranes placed himself in the centre; gave the left wing to the king of the Adiabenians, and the right to the king of the Medes. The greatest part of the heavy-armed horse covered the front of the right wing.

As Lucullus was preparing to pass the river, some of his general-officers advised him not to engage upon that day, because one of those unfortunate days, which the Romans called black days. For it was the fame upon which the army of Scipio had been defeated in the battle with the Cimbri. Lucullus made them this answer, which afterwards became so famous: And for me, I will make this an happy day for the Romans. It was the sixth day of October, (the day before the nones of October.)

After having made that reply, and exhorted them not to be discouraged, he passed the river, and marched foremost against the enemy. He was armed with a steel cuirass, made in the form of scales, which glittered surprizingly, under which was his coat of arms bordered all around with a fringe. He carried his naked sword shining in his hand, to intimate to his troops, that it was necessary to join an enemy immediately, accustomed to fight only at a distance with their arrows; and to deprive them, by the swiftness and impetuosity of the attack, of the space required for the use of them.

Perceiving that the heavy-armed cavalry, upon whom the enemy very much relied, were drawn up at the foot of a little hill, of which the summit was flat and level, and the declivity of not above five hundred paces, neither much broken, nor very difficult, he saw at first view what use he had to make of it. He commanded his Thracian and Galatian horse to charge that body of the enemy's cavalry in flank, with orders only to turn aside their lances with their swords. For the principal, or rather whole, force of those heavy-armed horse, consisted in their lances, which when they had not room to use, they could do nothing either against the enemy, or for themselves; their arms being so heavy, stiff, and cumbersome, that they could not turn themselves, and were almost immovable.

Whilst his cavalry marched to execute his orders, he took two cohorts of foot, and went to gain the eminence. The infantry followed courageously, excited by the example of their general, whom they saw marching foremost on foot, and ascending the hill. When he was at the top, he hewed himself from the highest part of it, and seeing from thence the whole order of the enemy's battle, he cried out, "The victory is ours, fellow-soldiers, the victory is ours." At the same time, with his two cohorts he advanced against that heavy-armed cavalry, and ordered his troops not to make use of their pikes, but join those horse sword in hand, and strike upon their legs and thighs, which were the only unarmed parts about them. But his soldiers had not so much trouble with them. That cavalry did not stay their coming on, but shamefully took to flight; and howling as they fled, fell with their heavy unwieldy horses into the ranks of their foot, without joining battle at all, or so much as making a single thrust with their lances. The slaughter did not begin until they began to fly, or rather to endeavour it; for they could not do so, being prevented vented by their own battalions, whose ranks were so close and deep, that they could not break their way through them. Tigranes, that king so lofty and brave in words, had taken to flight from the beginning with a few followers; and seeing his son, the companion of his fortune, he took off his diadem, weeping, and giving it him, exhorted him to save himself as well as he could by another route. That young prince was afraid to put the diadem upon his head, which would have been a dangerous ornament at such a time, and gave it into the hands of one of the most faithful of his servants, who was taken a moment after, and carried to Lucullus.

It is said, that in this defeat more than an hundred thousand of the enemy's foot perished, and that very few of their horse escaped: On the side of the Romans, only five were killed, and an hundred wounded. They had never engaged in a pitched battle so great a number of enemies with so few troops; for the victors did not amount to the twentieth part of the vanquished. The greatest and most able Roman generals, who had seen most wars and battles, gave Lucullus particular praises, for having defeated two of the greatest and most powerful kings in the world, by two entirely different methods, delay and expedition. For by protraction and spinning out the war, he exhausted Mithridates when he was strongest and most formidable; and ruined Tigranes, by making haste, and not giving him time to look about him. It has been remarked, that few captains have known how, like him, to make sloveness active, and haste sure.

It was this latter conduct that prevented Mithridates from being present in the battle. He imagined Lucullus would use the same precaution and protraction against Tigranes, as he had done against himself. So that he marched but slowly, and by small days journeys to join Tigranes. But having met some Armenians upon the way, who fled with the utmost terror and consternation, he suspected what had happened; and afterwards meeting a much greater number, was fully informed informed of the defeat, and went in search of Tigranes. He found him at length, abandoned by all the world, and in a very deplorable condition. Far from returning his ungenerous treatment, and insulting Tigranes in his misfortunes, as he had done him, he quitted his horse, lamented their common disasters, gave him the guard that attended, and the officers that served him, comforted, encouraged him, and revived his hopes: So that Mithridates, upon this occasion, shewed himself not entirely void of humanity. Both together applied to raising new troops on all sides.

In the mean time a furious sedition arose in Tigranocerta; the Greeks having mutinied against the Barbarians, and determined at all events to deliver the city to Lucullus. That sedition was at the height when he arrived there. He took advantage of the occasion, ordered the assault to be given, took the city, and after having seized all the king's treasures, abandoned it to be plundered by the soldiers; who, besides other riches, found in it eight thousand talents of coined silver (about one million two hundred thousand pounds sterling.) Besides this plunder, he gave each soldier eight hundred drachmas, which, with all the booty they had taken, did not suffice to satisfy their insatiable avidity.

(l) As this city had been peopled by colonies, which had been carried away by force from Cappadocia, Cilicia, and other places, Lucullus permitted them all to return into their native countries. They received that permission with extreme joy, and quitted it in so great a number, that from one of the greatest cities in the world, Tigranocerta became in an instant almost a desert.

(m) If Lucullus had pursued Tigranes after his victory, without giving him time to raise new troops, he would either have taken or driven him out of the country, and the war had been at an end. His having failed to do so, was very ill taken both in the army and

OF PONTUS.

and at Rome, and he was accused, not of negligence, but of having intended by such conduct to make himself necessary, and to retain the command longer in his own hands. This was one of the reasons that prejudiced the generality against him, and induced them to think of giving him a successor, as we shall see in the sequel.

After the great victory he had gained over Tigranes, several nations came to make their submissions to him. He received also an embassy from the king of the Parthians, who demanded the amity and alliance of the Romans. Lucullus received this proposal favourably, and sent also ambassadors to him, who, being arrived at the Parthian court, discovered, that the king, uncertain which side to take, wavered between the Romans and Tigranes, and had secretly demanded Mesopotamia of the latter, as the price of the aid he offered him. Lucullus, informed of this secret intrigue, resolved to leave Mithridates and Tigranes, and turn his arms against the king of the Parthians; flattered with the grateful thought, that nothing could be more glorious for him, than to have entirely reduced, in one expedition, the three most powerful princes under the sun. But the opposition this proposal met with from the troops, obliged him to renounce his enterprise against the Parthians, and to confine himself to pursuing Tigranes.

During this delay, Mithridates and Tigranes had been indefatigable in raising new troops. They had sent to implore aid of the neighbouring nations, and especially of the Parthians, who were the nearest, and at the same time in the best condition to assist them in the present emergency of their affairs. Mithridates wrote a letter to their king, which Sallust has preserved, and is to be found amongst his fragments. I shall insert a part of it in this place.

Letter
ALL those who, in a state of prosperity, are invited to enter as confederates into a war, ought first to consider, whether peace be at their own option; and next, whether what is demanded of them, is consistent with justice, their interest, safety, and glory. You might enjoy perpetual peace and tranquillity, were not the enemy always intent upon seizing occasions of war, and entirely void of faith. In reducing the Romans, you cannot but acquire exalted glory. It may seem inconsistent in me, to propose to you either an alliance with Tigranes, or, powerful as you are, that you should join a prince in my unfortunate condition. But I dare advance, that those two motives, your resentment against Tigranes upon account of his late war with you, and the no advantageous situation of my affairs, to judge rightly of them, far from opposing my demand, ought to support it. For as to Tigranes, as he knows he has given you just cause of complaint, he will accept, without difficulty, whatever conditions you shall think fit to impose upon him; and for me, I can say, that fortune, by having deprived me of almost all I possessed, has enabled me to give others good counsels, and, which is much to be desired in persons of

* Arsaces was a common name to all the kings of Parthia.

† Omnes, qui secundis rebus suis ad belli societatem orantur, confiderare debent, licetae tum pacem agere: dein quod quieritur, fatihe pium, tutum, gloriofum, an indicorum sit. Tibi perpetua pace frui liceret, nisi hostes opportuni & sceleftifimi. Egregia fama fi Romanos opprefferis, futura eff. Neque petere audeam societatem, & frutfr multa mea cum tuis bonis miseri sperem. Atqui ea, quae te morari posse videntur, ira in Tigranem recentis belli, & meae res parum prospera, si vera eftum vales, maxime horabuntur. Ille enim obnoxious, qualem tu voles societatem accipiet: mihi fortuna, multis rebus erectis, uftum dedit bene fuadendi, & quod florantibus optabile eft, ego non validifsimus præbeco exemplum, quo reftius tua componas. Namque Romanis cum nationibus, populis, regibus cunctis, una & eae vetus caufa bellandi eft, cupido profunda imperii & divitiarum,
OF PONTUS.

...of prosperity, I can, even from my own misfortunes, supply you with examples, and induce you to take better measures than I have done. For, do not deceive yourself, it is with all the nations, states, and kingdoms of the earth, the Romans are at war; and two motives, as ancient as powerful, put their arms into their hands; the unbounded ambition of extending their conquests, and the in\- fatiable thirst of riches." Mithridates afterwards enumerates at large the princes and kings they had reduced one after another, and often by one another. He repeats also his first successes against the Romans, and his late misfortunes. He goes on to this effect:

"Examine * now, I beg you, when we are finally ruined, whether you will be in a condition to resist the Romans, or can believe, that they will confine their conquests to my country? I know you are powerful in men, in arms, and treasure; it is therefore we desire to strengthen ourselves by your alliance; they, to grow rich by your spoils. For the

* Nunc quapro, considera, nobis oppressis, utrum firmiorum te ad restitendum, an finem bellorum putes? Secio equidem tibi magnas opes virorum, armorum, & auri esse: & ea re nobis ad societatem, ab illis ad prædam peteris. Cæterum confilium est Tigranis, regno integro, meis militibus bellii prudentibus, procul ab domo, parvo labore, per nostra corpora bellum conficiere: quando neque vincere neque vinciri fines peculio tuo possimus. An ignoras Romanos, potquam ad occidentem pergentibus finem oceanus fecit, arma huc convertisse? Neque quicquam à principio nisi raptum haberc; domum, conjuges, argos, imperium? Convenas, olim fine patriæ, finis parentibus, pelle conditos orbis terrarum: quibus non humana ulla neque divina obstant, quin socios, amicos, procur, juxtaque sitos, inopes, potenteque trahant, excitantque; omniaque non s駪a, & maxime regna, hostilia ducant. Namque pauci libertatem pars magna juitos dominos volunt. Nos suifpecti sumus Æmuli, & in tempore vindices affuturi. Tu vero cui Seleucia maxima urbium, regnunque Percidis incitatis divitias est, quid ab illis, nisi dolum in prælios, & po\nsa bellum expectas? Romani in omnes arma habent, acceríma in eos quibus spolia maxima sunt. Andendo & fallendo, & bella ex bellis ferendo, magni facti. Per hunc morem extinguent omnibus aut occident: quod difficile non est, si tu Mesopotamia, nos Armeniâ circumgredimur exercitum fine frumento, fine auxiliis. Fortuna autem nostris vitis adhuc incolu-mis. Teque illa fama sequetur, auxilio profectum magnis regibus latrones gentium oppressiæ. Quod uti facias moneo hortorque, ne malis pernicie nostra unum imperium probare, quam societate victor fieri,
The intent of Tigranes to avoid drawing the war into his own country, that we shall go with all my troops, which are certainly well-disciplined, to carry our arms far from home, and attack the enemy in person in their own country. We cannot therefore either conquer or be conquered, without your being in danger. Do you not know, that the Romans, when they found themselves stopped by the ocean on the West, turned their arms this way? That to look back to their foundation and origin, whatever they have, they have from violence, home, wives, lands, and dominions. A vile herd of every kind of vagabonds, without country, without fore-fathers, they established themselves for the misfortune of human race. Neither divine nor human laws restrain them from betraying and destroying their allies and friends, remote nations or neighbours, the weak or the powerful. They reckon all enemies that are not their slaves; and especially, whatever bears the name of king. For few nations affect a free and independent government; the generality prefer just and equitable masters. They suspect us, because we are said to emulate their power, and may in time avenge their oppressions. But for you, who have Selucia, the greatest of cities, and Persia, the richest and most powerful of kingdoms, what can you expect from them, but deceit at present, and war hereafter? The Romans are at war with all nations; but especially with those, from whom the richest spoils are to be expected. They are become great by enterprizing, betraying, and by making one war bring forth another. By this means they will either destroy all others, or be destroyed themselves. It will not be difficult to ruin them, if you, on the side of Mesopotamia, and we, on that of Armenia, surround their army, without provisions or auxiliaries. The prosperity of their arms has subsisted hitherto solely by our fault, who have not been so prudent to understand this common enemy, and to ally ourselves against against him. It will be for your immortal glory to have supported two great kings, and to have conquered and destroyed those robbers of the world. This is what I earnestly advise and exhort you to do; that you may chuse rather to share with us by a salutary alliance, in conquering the common enemy, than to suffer the Roman empire to extend itself universally by our ruin."

It does not appear that this letter had the effect upon Phraates, Mithridates might have hoped from it. So that the two kings contented themselves with their own troops.

(i) One of the means made use of by Tigranes to assemble a new army, was to recall Megadates from Syria, who had governed it fourteen years in his name: Him he sent orders to join him with all the troops in that country. (m) Syria being thereby entirely ungarrisoned, Antiochus Asiaticus, son of Antiochus Eupator, to whom it of right appertained, as lawful heir of the house of Seleucus, took possession of some part of the country, and reigned there peaceably during four years.

(n) The army of Tigranes and Mithridates was at last formed. It consisted of seventy thousand chosen men, whom Mithridates had exercised well in the Roman discipline. It was about midsummer before it took the field. The two kings took particular care, in all the motions they made, to chuse an advantageous ground for their camp, and to fortify it well, to prevent Lucullus's attacking them in it; nor could all the stratagems he used engage them to come to a battle. Their design was to reduce him gradually; to harass his troops on their marches, in order to weaken them; to intercept his convoys, and oblige him to quit the country for want of provisions. Lucullus not being able, by all the arts he could use, to bring them into the open field, employed a new means, which succeeded. Tigranes had had left at Artaxata, the capital of Armenia before the foundation of Tigranocerta, his wives and children; as he had almost all his treasures. Lucullus marched that way with all his troops, rightly foreseeing, that Tigranes would not remain quiet, when he saw the danger to which his capital was exposed. That prince accordingly decamped immediately, followed Lucullus to disconcert his design; and by four great marches having got before him, posted himself behind the river * Arfamia, which Lucullus was obliged to pass in his way to Artaxata, and resolved to dispute the passage with him. The Romans passed the river without being prevented by the presence or efforts of the enemy, a great battle ensued, in which the Romans again obtained a compleat victory. There were three kings in the Armenian army, of whom Mithridates behaved the worst. For not being able to look the Roman legions in the face, as soon as they charged, he was one of the first that fled; which threw the whole army into such a consternation, that it entirely lost courage; and this was the principal cause of the loss of the battle.

(o) Lucullus, after this victory, determined to continue his march to Artaxata, which was the certain means to put an end to the war. But as that city was still several days journey from thence towards the north, and winter approached, by its train of snows and storms, the + soldiers, already fatigued by a sufficiently rude campaign, refused to follow him into that country, where the cold was too severe for them. He was obliged to lead them into a warmer climate, by returning the way he came. He therefore repassed mount Taurus, and entered Mesopotamia, where he took the city Nisibis, a place of considerable strength, and put his troops into winter-quarters.

(o) Dion. Caes. l. xxxvii. p. 3—7.
* Or Arfania.
† Nofter exercitus, eti urbem ex Tigranis regno ceperat, & praelis ulus erat secundis, tamen nimiä longinquitate locorum, ac desiderio suorum commovebatur. Cic. pro lege Mar. n. 23.
It was there the spirit of mutiny began to shew itself openly in the army of Lucullus. That general's severity, and the insolent liberty of the Roman soldiers, and still more, the malignant practices of Clodius, had given occasion for this revolt. Clodius, so well known for the invectives of Cicero his enemy, is hardly better treated by historians. They represent him as a man abandoned to all kind of vices, and infamous for his debauches, which he carried so far, as to commit incest with his own sister, the wife of Lucullus; to these he added unbounded audacity, and uncommon cunning in the contrivance of seditions: In a word, he was one of those dangerous persons, born to disturb and ruin every thing, by the unhappy union in himself of the most wicked inclinations with the talents necessary for putting them in execution. He gave a proof of this upon the occasion we are now speaking. Discontented with Lucullus, he secretly spread reports against him, highly proper to render him odious. He affected to lament extremely the fatigues of the soldiers, and to enter into their interests. He told them every day, that they were very unfortunate, in being obliged to serve so long under a severe and avaricious general, in a remote climate, without lands or rewards, whilst their fellow-soldiers, whose conquests were very moderate in comparison with theirs, had enriched themselves under Pompey. Discourses of this kind, attended with obliging and popular behaviour, which he knew how to assume occasionally without the appearance of affectation, made such an impression upon the soldiers, that it was no longer in the power of Lucullus to govern them.

Mithridates, in the mean time, had re-entered Pontus with four thousand of his own, and four thousand troops given him by Tigranes. Several Vol. VII. & inha

* Mithridates & suam manu- & magnis adventitiis multorum am jam confirmārat, & eorum regum & nationum copiis juva-qui fe ex ejus regno collegerant, batur. Hoc jam fere sic fere batur.
inhabitants of the country joined him again, as well out of hatred to the Romans, who had treated them with great rigour, as the remains of affection for their king, reduced to the mournful condition in which they saw him from the most splendid fortune and exalted greatness. For the misfortunes of princes naturally excite compassion, and there is generally a profound respect in the hearts of the people, for the name and person of kings. Mithridates, encouraged and strengthened by these new aids, and the troops which several neighbouring states and princes sent him, resumed courage, and saw himself, more than ever, in a condition to make head against the Romans. * So that not contented with being re-established in his dominions, which a moment before he did not so much as hope ever to see again, he had the boldness to attack the Roman troops so often victorious, beat a body of them, commanded by Fabius, and after having put them to the route, pressed Friarius and Sornatius, two other of Lucullus's lieutenancy in that country, with great vigour.

Lucullus at length engaged his soldiers to quit their winter-quarters, and to go to their aid. But they arrived too late. Friarius had imprudently ventured a battle, in which Mithridates had defeated him, and killed him seven thousand men; amongst whom were reckoned an hundred and fifty centurians, and twenty-four tribunes †, which made this one of the greatest losses the Romans had sustained a great

---

* Cic. pro leg. Manil. n. 25.
† Quæ calamitas tanta fuit, ut eam ad aures L. Luculli, non ex præliio nuntius, sed ex sermone Junior addideret. Ibid.
The army had been entirely defeated, but for a wound Mithridates received, which exceedingly alarmed his troops, and gave the enemy time to escape. Lucullus, upon his arrival, found the dead bodies upon the field of battle, and did not give orders for their interment: Which still more exasperated his soldiers against him. The spirit of revolt rose so high, that without any regard for his character as a general, they treated him no longer but with insolence and contempt; and though he went from tent to tent, and almost from man to man, to conjure them to march against Mithridates and Tigranes, he could never prevail upon them to quit the place where they were. They answered him brutally, that as he had no thoughts but of enriching himself alone out of the spoils of the enemy, he might march alone, and fight them, if he thought fit.

Sect. IV. Mithridates, taking advantage of the discord which had arose in the Roman army, recovers all his dominions. Pompey is chosen to succeed Lucullus. He overbrows Mithridates in several battles. The latter flies in vain to Tigranes his son-in-law for refuge, who is engaged in a war with his own son. Pompey marches into Armenia against Tigranes, who comes to him and surrenders himself. Weary of pursuing Mithridates to no purpose, he returns into Syria, makes himself master of that kingdom, and puts an end to the empire of the Seleucides. He marches back to Pontus. Pharnaces makes the army revolt against his father Mithridates, who kills himself. That prince's character. Pompey's expeditions into Arabia and Judea, where he takes Jerusalem. After having reduced all the cities of Pontus, he returns to Rome, and receives the honour of a triumph.
commanded. The senate, at the same time, disbanded Fimbria's legions, which were part of his army. All this news augmented the disobedience and insolence of the troops in regard to Lucullus.

(q) It is true, his rough, austere, and frequently haughty disposition, gave some room for such usage. He cannot be denied the glory of having been one of the greatest captains of his age; and of having had almost all the qualities that form a complete general. But the want of one diminished the merit of all the rest; I mean, address in winning the heart, and making himself beloved by the soldiers. He was difficult of access; rough in commanding; carried exactitude, in point of duty, to an excess that made it odious; was inexorable in punishing offences; and did not know how to conciliate esteem by praises and rewards bestowed opportunely, an air of kindness and favour, and insinuating manners, still more efficacious than either gifts or praises. And what proves, that the sedition of the troops was in a great measure his own fault, was their being very docile and obedient under Pompey.

In consequence of the letters Lucullus wrote to the senate, in which he acquainted them, that Mithridates was entirely defeated, and utterly incapable of retrieving himself, commissioners had been nominated to regulate the affairs of Pontus, as of a kingdom totally reduced. They were much surprised to find, upon their arrival, that far from being master of Pontus, he was not so much as master of his army, and that his own soldiers treated him with the utmost contempt.

The arrival of the consul Acilius Glabrio still added to their licentiousness. He informed them, that Lucullus had been accused at Rome of protracting the the war for the sake of continuing his command; that the senate had disbanded part of his troops, and forbad them paying him any further obedience. So that he soon found himself almost entirely abandoned by the soldiers. Mithridates taking advantage of this disorder, had time to recover his whole kingdom, and to make ravages in Cappadocia.

* In ipfo illo majo gravissima-que belli offensione, L. Lucullus, qui tamen aliquam ex parte iis in-commodis mederi fortasse potuit, vestro jufliu caecus, quod imperii diurnitati modum statuit.

Whilst the affairs of the army were in this condition, great noise was made at Rome against Lucullus. Pompey was returned from putting an end to the war with the pirates, in which an extraordinary power had been granted him. Upon this occasion one of the tribunes of the people, named Manilius, passed a decree to this effect: "That Pompey, taking upon him the command of all the troops and provinces which were under Lucullus, and adding to them Bithynia, where Acilius commanded, should be charged with making war upon the kings Mithridates and Tigranes, retaining under him all the naval forces, and continuing to command at sea with the same conditions and prerogatives, as had been granted him in the war against the pirates: "That is to say, that he should have absolute power on all the coasts of the Mediterranean, to thirty leagues distance from the sea." This was, in effect, subjecting the whole Roman empire to one man. For all the provinces which had not been granted him by the first decree, Phrygia, Lycaonia, Galatia, Cappadocia, Cilicia the higher, Colchis, and Armenia, were conferred upon him by this second, that included also all the armies and forces, with which Lucullus had defeated the two kings, Mithridates and Tigranes.

Consideration for Lucullus, who was deprived of the glory of his great exploits, and in the place of whom a general was appointed, to succeed more to the honours of his triumph, than the command of his armies, was not, however, what gave the nobility and senate most concern. They were well convinced that great wrong was done him, and that his services were not treated with the gratitude they deserved. But what gave them most pain, and they could not support, was that high degree of power to which Pompey was raised, which they considered as a tyranny already formed. It is for this reason they exhorted each other in a particular manner to oppose this decree, and not abandon their expiring liberty.

Cæsar and Cicero, who were very powerful at Rome, supported Manilius, or rather Pompey, with all their credit. It was upon this occasion, the latter pronounced that fine oration before the people, intitled, For the law of Manilius. After having demonstrated, in the two first parts of his discourse, the necessity and importance of the war in question, he proves, in the third, that Pompey is the only person capable of terminating it successfully. For this purpose, he enumerates the qualities necessary to form a general of an army, and shews that Pompey possesses them all in a supreme degree. He insists principally upon his probity, humanity, innocence of manners, integrity, disinterestedness, love of the publick good: "Virtues, by so much the more necessary," says he, "as the Roman name is become infamous and hateful amongst foreign nations, and our allies, in effect of the: debauches, avarice, and unheard-of oppressions of the generals and magistrates we send amongst them. "Instead of which, the wife, "moderate, and irreproachable conduct of Pompey, "will make him be regarded, not as sent from "Rome,

* Difficile est dici, Quirites, quanto in odio situs apud cæteras nationes, propter eorum, quos ad eas hac anno cum imperio minus, injurias ac libidines. Cíc. pro leg. Man. n. 61.

† Itaque omnes quidem nunc in his locis Cn. Pompeium, sicut aliquid non ex huc urbe militum, sed de celo delapsum intueri. Nunc denique incipient credere suisse homines Romanos hac quondam abstitentiâ, quod jam nationibus cæteris incredibile, ac falsa memoria prodivitum, videbatur. Nunc imperii nostrî splendor illis gentibus lucet: nunc intelligunt, non sine causa majores suos tum, cum hac temperantia magistratus habeamus, servire populo Romano, quam imperare alios maluiisse. Ibid. n. 41.
OF PONTUS.

Rome, but descended from heaven, for the happiness of the people. We begin to believe, that all which is related of the noble disinterested of those ancient Romans is real and true; and that it was not without reason, under such magistrates, that nations chose rather to obey the Roman people, than to command others.

Pompey was at that time the idol of the people, wherefore the fear of displeasing the multitude kept those grave senators silent, who had appeared so well inclined, and so full of courage. The decree was authorized by the suffrages of all the tribes, and Pompey, though absent, declared absolute master of almost all Sylla had usurped by arms, and by making a cruel war upon his country.

We must not imagine, says a very judicious historian, that either Cæsar or Cicero, who took so much pains to have this law passed, acted from views of the publick good. Cæsar, full of ambition and great projects, endeavoured to make his court to the people, whose authority he knew was at that time much greater than the senate’s: He thereby opened himself a way to the same power, and familiarized the Romans to extraordinary and unlimited commissions: In heapimg upon the head of Pompey so many favours and glaring distinctions, he flattered himself, that he should at length render him odious to the people, who would soon take offence at them. So that in lifting him up, he had no other design than to prepare a precipice for him. Cicero also intended only his own greatness. It was his weakness to desire to lord it in the commonwealth, not indeed by guilt and violence, but by the method of persuasion. Besides his having the support of Pompey’s credit in view, he was very well pleased with shewing the nobility and people, who formed two parties, and in a manner two republicks in the state, that he was capable of making the balance incline to the side he espoused. In consequence, it was always his policy to conciliate equally equally both parties, in declaring sometimes for the one, and sometimes for the other.

(t) Pompey, who had already terminated the war with the pirates, was still in Cilicia, when he received letters to inform him of all the people had decreed in his favour. When his friends, who were present, congratulated him, and expressed their joy, it is said, that he knit his brows, struck his thigh, and cried out, as if oppressed by, and sorry for that new command; Gods, what endless labours am I devoted to? Had I not been more happy as a man unknown and inglorious? Shall I never cease to make war, nor ever have my arms off my back? Shall I never escape the envy that persecutes me, nor live at peace in the country with my wife and children?

This is usually enough the language of the ambitious, even of those who are most excessively actuated by that passion. But however successful they may be in imposing upon themselves, it seldom happens that they deceive others, and the publick is far from mistaking them. The friends of Pompey, and even those who were most intimate with him, could not support his dissimulation at this time. For there was not one of them who did not know, that his natural ambition and passion for command, still more inflamed by his difference with Lucullus, made him find a more exalted and sensible satisfaction, in the new charge conferred upon him. And his actions soon took off the mask, and explained his real sentiments.

The first step which he took upon arriving in the provinces of his government, was to forbid any obedience whatsoever to the orders of Lucullus. In his march, he altered every thing his predecessor had decreed. He discharged some from the penalties Lucullus had laid upon them; deprived others of the rewards he had given them; in short, his sole view in every thing, was to let the partizans of Lucullus lus see, that they adhered to a man, who had neither authority nor power. (u) Strabo’s uncle by the mother’s side, highly discontented with Mithridates, for having put to death several of his relations, to avenge himself for that cruelty, had gone over to Lucullus, and had given up fifteen places in Cappadocia to him. Lucullus loaded him with honours, and promised to reward him as such considerable services deserved. Pompey, far from having any regard for such unjust and reasonable engagements, which his predecessors had entered into solely from the view of the public good, affected an universal opposition to them, and looked upon all those as his enemies, who had contracted any friendship with Lucullus.

It is not uncommon for a successor to endeavour to lessen the value of his predecessor’s actions, in order to arrogate all honour to himself; but certainly none ever carried that conduct to such monstrous excess, as Pompey did at this time. His great qualities and innumerable conquests are exceedingly extolled; but so base and odious a jealousy ought to fully, or rather totally eclipse, the glory of them. Such was the manner in which Pompey thought fit to begin.

Lucullus made bitter complaints of him. Their common friends, in order to a reconciliation, concerted an interview between them. It passed at first with all possible politeness, and with reciprocal marks of esteem and amity. But these were only compliments, and a language that extended no farther than the lips, which costs the great nothing. The heart soon explained itself. The conversation growing warm by degrees, they proceeded to injurious terms; Pompey reproaching Lucullus with his avarice, and Lucullus Pompey with his ambition, in which they spoke the truth of each other. They parted more incensed, and greater enemies than before.

Lucul-

(u) Strab. l. xii. p. 557, 558.
Lucullus set out for Rome, whither he carried a great quantity of books, which he had collected in his conquests. He put them into a library, which was open to all the learned and curious, whom it drew about him in great numbers. They were received at his house with all possible politeness and generosity. The honour of a triumph was granted to Lucullus; but not without being long contested.

(x) It was he that first brought cherries to Rome, which till then had been unknown in Europe. They were called Cerasus, from a city of that name in Cappadocia.

Pompey began, by engaging Phraates king of the Parthians in the Roman interest. He has been spoken of already, and is the same who was surnamed the God. He concluded on offensive and defensive alliance with him. He offered peace also to Mithridates; but that prince, believing himself sure of the amity and aid of Phraates, would not so much as hear it mentioned. When he was informed that Pompey had prevented him, he sent to treat with him. But Pompey having demanded, by way of preliminary, that he should lay down his arms, and give up all defectors, those proposals were very near occasioning a mutiny in Mithridates's army. As there were abundance of defectors in it, they could not suffer any thing to be said upon delivering them up to Pompey; nor would the rest of the army consent to see themselves weakened by the loss of their comrades. Mithridates was obliged to tell them, that he had sent his ambassadors only to inspect into the condition of the Roman army; and to swear, that he would not make peace with the Romans either on those or on any other conditions.

Pompey, having distributed his fleet in different stations, to guard the whole sea between Phœnicia and the Bosphorus, marched by land against Mithridates, who had still thirty thousand foot, and two or three thousand horse; but did not dare however to come to a battle. That prince was encamped very strongly strongly upon a mountain, where he could not be forced; but he abandoned it on Pompey's approach, for want of water. Pompey immediately took possession of it, and conjecturing, from the nature of the plants and other signs, that there was abundance of springs within it, he ordered wells to be dug, and in an instant the camp had water in abundance. Pompey could not sufficiently wonder how Mithridates, for want of attention and curiosity, had been so long ignorant of so important and necessary a resource.

(x) Plin. i. xv. c. 25.

Soon after he followed him, encamped near him, and shut him up within good walls, which he carried quite round his camp. They were almost eight* leagues in circumference, and were fortified with good towers, at proper distances from each other. Mithridates, either through fear or negligence, suffered him to finish his works. He reduced him in consequence to such a want of provisions, that his troops were obliged to subsist upon the carriage-beasts in their camp. The horses only were spared. After having sustained this kind of siege for almost fifty days, Mithridates escaped by night, with all the best troops of his army, having first ordered all the useless and sick persons to be killed.

Pompey immediately pursued him, came up with him near the Euphrates, encamped near him; and apprehending, that in order to escape, he would make haste to pass the river, he quitted his entrenchments, and advanced against him by night in order of battle. His design was only to surround the enemy, to prevent their flying, and to attack them at day-break the next morning. But all his old officers made such intreaties and remonstrances to him, that they determined him to fight without waiting till day; for the night was not very dark, the moon giving light enough for distinguishing objects, and knowing one another. Pompey could not refuse himself to the ardour of his troops, and led them on against the enemy. The Barbarians were afraid to stand the attack, and fled immedi-immediately in the utmost consternation. The Romans made a great slaughter of them, killed them above ten thousand men, and took their whole camp.

Mithridates, with eight hundred horse, in the beginning of the battle, opened himself a way sword in hand through the Roman army, and went off. But those eight hundred horse soon quitted their ranks and dispersed, and left him with only three followers, of which number was Hypsicratia, one of his wives, a woman of masculine courage and warlike boldness, which occasioned her being called Hypsicrates (x), by changing the termination of her name from the feminine to the masculine. She was mounted that day upon a Persian horse, and wore the habit of a soldier of that nation. She continued to attend the king, without giving way to the fatigues of his long journeys, or being weary of serving him, though she took care of his horse herself, till they arrived at a fortress, where the king's treasures and most precious effects lay. There, after having distributed the most magnificent of his robes to such as were assembled about him, he made a present to each of his friends of a mortal poison, that none of them might fall alive into the hands of their enemies, but by their own consent.

(y) That unhappy fugitive saw no other hopes for him, but from his son-in-law Tigranes. He sent ambassadors to demand his permission to take refuge in his dominions, and aid for the re-establishment of his entirely ruined affairs. Tigranes was at that time at war with his son. He caused those ambassadors to be seized, and thrown into prison, and set a price upon his father-in-law's head, promising an hundred * talents to whomsoever should seize or kill him; under pretence, that it was Mithridates who had made his son take up arms against him; but in reality to make his court to the Romans, as we shall soon see.

Pompey,

Pompey, after the victory he had gained, marched into Armenia major against Tigranes. He found him at war with his son of his own name. We have observed, that the king of Armenia had espoused Cleopatra, the daughter of Mithridates. He had three sons by her, two of whom he had put to death without reason. The third, to escape the cruelty of so unnatural a father, had fled to Phraates, king of Parthia, whose daughter he had married. His father-in-law carried him back to Armenia at the head of an army, where they besieged Artaxata. But finding the place very strong, and provided with every thing necessary for a good defence, Phraates left him part of the army to carry on the siege, and returned with the rest into his own dominions. Tigranes the father soon after fell upon the son with all his troops, beat his army, and drove him out of the country. That young prince, after this misfortune, had designed to withdraw to his grandfather Mithridates. But on the way was informed of his defeat, and having lost all hope of obtaining aid from him, he resolved to throw himself into the arms of the Romans. Accordingly, he entered their camp, and went to Pompey to implore his protection. Pompey gave him a very good reception, and was glad of his coming; for being to carry the war into Armenia, he had occasion for such a guide as him. He therefore caused that prince to conduct him directly to Artaxata.

Tigranes, terrified at this news, and sensible that he was not in a condition to oppose so powerful an army, resolved to have recourse to the generosity and clemency of the Roman general. He put the ambassadors, sent to him by Mithridates, into his hands, and followed them directly himself. Without taking any precaution, he entered the Roman camp, and went to submit his person and crown to the discretion of Pompey and the Romans. * He said, that of all the Romans,

* Mox ipse supplex & præfens que Romanum neque ullius gentis & regnumque ditioni ejus permittat, neminem aliam neque virum futurum suscipit, cuius se ficei commissurus foret, quam Cn. Pomp-Romans, and of all mankind, Pompey was the only person in whose faith he could confide; that in whatsoever manner he should decide his fate, he should be satisfied: That he was not ashamed to be conquered by a man, whom none could conquer; and that it was no dishonour to submit to him, whom fortune had made superior to all others.

When he arrived on horseback near the entrenchments of the camp, two of Pompey's lieutors came out to meet him, and ordered him to dismount and enter on foot; telling him that no stranger had ever been known to enter a Roman camp on horseback. Tigranes obeyed, and ungirt his sword, gave it to the lieutors; and after, when he approached Pompey, taking off his diadem, he would have laid it at his feet, and prostrated himself to the earth to embrace his knees. But Pompey ran to prevent him, and taking him by the hand, carried him into his tent, made him sit on the right, and his son, the young Tigranes, on the left side of him. He after referred hearing what he had to say to the next day, and invited the father and son to sup with him that evening. The son refused to be there with his father; and as he had not showed him the least mark of respect during the interview, and had treated him with the same indifference as if he had been a stranger, Pompey was very much offended at that behaviour. He did not, however, entirely neglect his interests in determining upon the affair of Tigranes. After having condemned Tigranes to pay the Romans six thousand talents for the charges of the war he had made against them without cause, and to relinquish to them all his conquests on that side of the Euphrates, he decreed, that he should reign in his ancient kingdom Armenia major, and that his son should have Gordiana and Sophena, two provinces upon the borders of Armenia.

Armenia, during his father's life, and all the rest of his dominions after his death; referring, however, to the father, the treasuries he had in Sophena, without which it had been impossible for him to have paid the Romans the sum Pompey required of him.

The father was well satisfied with these conditions, which still left him a crown. But the son, who had entertained chimerical hopes, could not relish a decree which deprived him of what had been promised him. He was even so much discontented with it, that he wanted to escape, in order to have excited new troubles. Pompey, who suspected his design, ordered him to be always kept in view; and upon his absolutely refusing to consent that his father should withdraw his treasuries from Sophena, he caused him to be put into prison. Afterwards having discovered, that he solicited the Armenian nobility to take up arms, and endeavoured to engage the Parthians to do the same, he put him among those he reserved for his triumph.

Some time after, Phraates, king of the Parthians, sent to Pompey, to claim that young prince as his son-in-law; and to represent to him, that he ought to make the Euphrates the boundary of his conquests. Pompey made answer, that the younger Tigranes was more related to his father than his father-in-law; and that as to his conquests, he should give them such bounds as reason and justice required; but without being prescribed them by any one.

When Tigranes had been suffered to possess himself of his treasures in Sophena, he paid the six thousand talents, and besides that, gave every private soldier fifty * drachmas, a + thousand to a centurion, and ten thousand to each ‡ tribune; and by that liberality obtained the title of friend and ally of the Roman people. This had been pardonable, had he not added to it abject behaviour and submissions unworthy of a king.

Pompey gave all Cappadocia to Ariobarzanes, and added

* About 223.
+ About 251. sterling.
‡ About 2501. sterling.
added to it Sophena and Gordiana, which he had designed for young Tigranes.

(z) After having regulated every thing in Armenia, Pompey marched northwards in pursuit of Mithridates. Upon the banks of the * Cyrus he found the Albanians and Iberians, two powerful nations, situate between the Caspian and Euxine seas, who endeavoured to stop him; but he beat them, and obliged the Albanians to demand peace. He granted it, and passed the winter in their country.

The next year he took the field very early against the Iberians. This was a very warlike nation, and had never been conquered. It had always retained its liberty, during the time that the Medes, Persians, and Macedonians, had alternately possessed the empire of Asia. Pompey found means to subdue this people, though not without very considerable difficulties, and obliged them to demand peace. The king of the Iberians sent him a bed, a table, and a throne; all of masy gold; desiring him to accept those presents as earnefts of his amity. Pompey put them into the hands of the quaestors for the publick treasury. He also subjected the people of Colchis, and made their king Olthaces prisoner, whom he afterwards led in triumph. From thence he returned into Albania, to chastise that nation for having taken up arms again, whilst he was engaged with the Iberians and people of Colchis.

The army of the Albanians was commanded by Cosis, the brother of king Orodes. That prince, as soon as the two armies came to blows, confined himself to Pompey, and spurring furiously up to him, darted his javelin at him. But Pompey received him so vigorously with his spear, that it went through his body, and laid him dead at his horse's feet. The Albanians were overthrown, and a great slaughter was made of them. This victory obliged king Orodes to buy a second peace upon the same terms with that he had had made with the Romans the year before, at the price of great presents, and by giving one of his sons as an hostage for his observing it better than he had done the former.

Mithridates, in the mean time, had passed the winter at Dioscurias, in the north-east of the Euxine sea. Early in the spring he marched to the Cimmerian Bosporus, through several nations of the Scythians, some of which suffered him to pass voluntarily, and others were obliged to it by force. The kingdom of the Cimmerian Bosporus is the same now called Crim-Tartary, and was at that time a province of Mithridates's empire. He had given it as an appanage to one of his sons, named Machares. But that young prince had been so vigorously handled by the Romans, whilst they besieged Sinope, and their fleet was in possession of the Euxine sea, which lay between that city and his kingdom, that he had been obliged to make a peace with them, and had inviolably observed it till then. He well knew that his father was extremely displeased with such conduct, and therefore very much apprehended his presence. In order to a reconciliation, he sent ambassadors to him upon his route, who represented to him, that he had been reduced to act in that manner, contrary to his inclination, by the necessity of his affairs. But finding that his father would not hearken to his reasons, he endeavoured to save himself by sea, and was taken by vessels sent expressly by Mithridates to cruise in his way. He chose rather to die than fall into his father's hands.

Pompey having terminated the war in the North, and seeing it impossible to follow Mithridates in the remote country into which he had retired, led back his army to the South, and on his march subjected Darius, king of the Medes, and Antiochus, king of Comagena. He went on to Syria, and made himself master of the whole empire. Scaurus reduced Coele-syria and Damascus, and Gabinius all the rest of the country, as far as the Tygris; they were his lieutenaut-generals. (c) Antiochus Asiaticus, son of Antiochus Eusebes, heir of the house of the Seleucides, who, by Lucullus's permission, had reigned four years in part of that country, of which he had taken possession when Tigranes abandoned it; came to solicit him to re-establish him upon the throne of his ancestors. But Pompey refused to give him audience, and deprived him of all his dominions, which he made a Roman province. Thus, whilst Tigranes was left in possession of Armenia, who had done the Romans great hurt, during the course of a long war, Antiochus was dethroned, who had never committed the least hostility, and by no means deserved such treatment. The reason given for it was, that the Romans had conquered Syria under Tigranes; that it was not just that they should lose the fruit of their victory; that Antiochus was a prince, who had neither the courage nor capacity necessary for the defence of the country; and that to put it into his hands, would be to expose it to the perpetual ravages and incursions of the Jews, which Pompey took care not to do. In consequence of this way of reasoning, Antiochus lost his crown, and was reduced to the necessity of passing his life as a private person. In him ended the empire of the Seleucides, after a duration of almost two hundred and fifty years.

Vol. VII.

During these expeditions of the Romans in Asia, great revolutions happened in Egypt. The Alexandrians, weary of their king Alexander, took up arms, and after having expelled him, called in Ptolemæus Auletes to supply his place. That history will be treated at large in the ensuing article.

(d) Pompey afterwards went to Damascus, where he regulated several affairs relating to Egypt and Judæa. During his residence there, twelve crowned heads went thither to make their court to him, and were all in the city at the same time.

(e) A fine contention between the love of a father and and the duty of a son was seen at this time, a very extraordinary contest in those days, when the most horrid murders and parricides frequently opened the way to thrones. Ariobarzanes, king of Cappadocia, voluntarily resigned the crown in favour of his son, and put the diadem on his head in the presence of Pompey. The most sincere tears flowed in abundance from the eyes of the truly afflicted son, for what others would have highly rejoiced. It was the sole occasion in which he thought disobedience allowable; and he would have perished in refusing the scepter, if Pompey’s orders had not interfered, and obliged him at length to submit to paternal authority. This is the second example Cappadocia has instanced of so generous a dispute. We have spoken in its place of the like contest between the two Ariarathes.

As Mithridates was in possession of several strong places in Pontus and Cappadocia, Pompey judged it necessary to return thither, in order to reduce them. He made himself master of almost all of them, in consequence, upon his arrival, and afterwards wintered at Aspis, a city of Pontus.

Stratonice, one of Mithridates’s wives, surrendered a castle of the Bosphorus, which she had in her keeping, to Pompey, with the treasures concealed in it, demanding only for recompence, if her son Xiphares should fall into his hands, that he should be restored to her. Pompey accepted only such of those presents as would serve for the ornaments of temples. When Mithridates knew what Stratonice had done, to revenge her facility in surrendering that fortress, which he considered as a treason, he killed Xiphares in his mother’s sight, who beheld that sad spectacle from the other side of the strait.

Caina, or the new city, was the strongest place in Pontus, and therefore Mithridates kept the greatest part of his treasures, and whatever he had of greatest value, in that place, which he conceived impregnable.

* Nec ullam sinem tam egregium certamen habuisset nisi patris voluntati auctoritas Pompeii adfuisset. Val. Max.*
Pompey took it, and with it all that Mithridates had left in it. Amongst other things were found secret memoirs, wrote by himself, which gave a very good light into his character. In one part he had noted down the persons he had poisoned, amongst whom were his own son Ariarathes, and Alcaeus of Sardis; the latter, because he had carried the prize in the chariot-race against him. What fantastical records were these! Was he afraid that the publick and posterity should not be informed of his monstrous crimes, and his motives for committing them?

(f) His memoirs of physic were also found there, which Pompey caused to be translated into Latin by Lenæus, a good grammarian, one of his freedmen; and they were afterwards made publick in that language. For amongst the other extraordinary qualities of Mithridates, he was very skilful in medicines. It was he who invented the excellent antidote, which still bears his name, and from which physicians have experienced such effects, that they continue to use it successfully to this day.

(g) Pompey, during his stay at Aspis, made such regulations in the affairs of the country, as the state of them would admit. As soon as the spring returned, he marched back into Syria for the same purpose. He did not think it advisable to pursue Mithridates in the kingdom of Bosporus, whither he was returned. To do that, he must have marched round the Euxine sea with an army, and passed through many countries, either inhabited by barbarous nations, or entirely desart; a very dangerous enterprize, in which he would have run great rique of perishing. So that all Pompey could do, was to post the Roman fleet in such a manner, as to intercept any convoys that might be sent to Mithridates. He believed, by that means, he should be able to reduce him to the last extremity; and said, on setting out, that he left Mithridates more formi-

(f) Plin. l. xxv. c. 20. (g) Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 5, 6.
Appian. p. 746—751.
formidable enemies than the Romans, which were hunger and necessity.

What carried him with so much ardour into Syria, was his excessive and vain-glorious ambition to push his conquests as far as the Red-sea. In Spain, and before that in Africa, he had carried the Roman arms as far as the western ocean on both sides of the straits of the Mediterranean. In the war against the Albanians, he had extended his conquests to the Caspian sea, and believed there was nothing wanting to his glory, but to push them on as far as the Red-sea.
Upon his arrival in Syria, he declared Antioch and Seleucia, upon the Orontus, free cities, and continued his march towards Damascus; from whence he designer to have gone on against the Arabians, and af-Afterwards to have conquered all the countries to the Red-sea. But an accident happened, which obliged him to suspend all his projects, and to return into Pontus.

Some time before, an embassy came to him from Mithridates, king of Pontus, who demanded peace.
He proposed, that he should be suffered to retain his hereditary dominions, as Tigranes had been, upon condition of paying a tribute to the Romans, and refining all other provinces. Pompey replied, that then he should also come in person, as Tigranes had done. Mithridates could not consent to such a meanness, but proposed sending his children, and some of his principal friends. Pompey would not agree to that. The negotiation broke up, and Mithridates applied himself to making preparations for war with as much vigour as ever. Pompey, who received advice of this activity, judged it necessary to be upon the spot, in order to have an eye to every thing. For that purpose, he went to pass some time at Amius, the ancient capital of the country. There, through the just punishment of the gods, says Plutarch, his ambition made him commit faults, which drew upon him the blame of all the world. He had publickly charged and reproached Lucullus, that subtilizing the war,

war, he had disposed of provinces, given rewards, decrees, honours, and acted in all things as victors are not accustomed to act, till a war be finally terminated; and now fell into the same inconsistency himself. For he disposed of governments, and divided the dominions of Mithridates into provinces, as if the war had been at an end. But Mithridates still lived, and every thing was to be apprehended from a prince inexhaustible in resources, whom the greatest defeats could not disconcert, and whom losses themselves seemed to inspire with new courage, and to supply with new forces. At that very time, when he was believed to be entirely ruined, he actually meditated a terrible invasion into the very heart of the Roman empire with the troops he had lately raised.

Pompey, in the distribution of rewards, gave Armenia minor to Dejotarus, prince of Galatia, who had always continued firmly attached to the Roman interests during this war, to which he added the title of king. It was this Dejotarus, who, by always persisting, out of gratitude, in his adherence to Pompey, incurred the resentment of Cæsar, and had occasion for the eloquence of Cicero to defend him.

He made Archelaus also high-priest of the Moon, who was the supreme goddess of the Comanians, and gave him the sovereignty of the place, which contained at least six thousand persons, all devoted to the worship of that deity. I have already observed, that this Archelaus was the son of him, who had commanded in chief the troops sent by Mithridates into Greece in his first war with the Romans, and who, being disgraced by that prince, had, with his son, taken refuge amongst them. They had always, from that time, continued their firm adherents, and had been of great use to them in the wars of Asia. The father being dead, the high-priesthood of Comana was given to the son, in recompence for the services of both.

During Pompey's stay in Pontus, Aretas, king of Arabia Petraea, took the advantage of his absence to make make incursions into Syria, which very much distressed the inhabitants. Pompey returned thither. Upon his way he came to the place where lay the dead bodies of the Romans killed in the defeat of Triarius. He caused them to be interred with great solemnity, which gained him the hearts of his soldiers. From thence he continued his march towards Syria, with the view of executing the projects he had formed for the war of Arabia: But important advices interrupted those designs.
OF PONTUS.

Though Mithridates had lost all hopes of peace, after Pompey had rejected the overtures he had caused to be made to him; and though he saw many of his subjects abandon his party, far from losing courage, he had formed the design of crossing Pannonia, and passing the Alps to attack the Romans in Italy itself, as Hannibal had done before him: A project more bold than prudent, with which his inveterate hatred and blind despair had inspired him. A great number of neighbouring Scythians had entered themselves in his service, and considerably augmented his army. He had sent deputies into Gaul to solicit that people to join him, when he should approach the Alps. As great passions are always credulous, and men easily flatter themselves in what they ardently desire, he was in hopes that the flame of the revolt among the slaves in Italy and Sicily, perhaps ill extinguished, might suddenly rekindle upon his presence: That the pirates would soon recover themselves of the empire of the sea, and involve the Romans in new difficulties; and that the provinces, oppressed by the avarice and cruelty of the magistrates and generals, would be fond of throwing off the yoke by his aid, under which they had so long groaned. Such were the thoughts that he had revolved in his mind.

But as to execute this project, it was necessary to march five hundred leagues, and traverse the countries now called Little Tartary, Moldavia, Walachia, Transylvania, Hungary, Stiria, Carinthia, Tirol, and Lombardy, and pass three great rivers, the Borythenes, Danube, Danube, and Po: The idea alone of so rude and dangerous a march, threw his army into such a terror, that, to prevent the execution of his design, they conspired against him, and chose Pharnaces his son king, who had been active in exciting the soldiers to this revolt. Mithridates then, seeing himself abandonied by all the world, and that even his son would not suffer him to escape where he could, retired to his apartment, and after having given poison to such of his wives and daughters as were with him at that time, he took the same himself; but when he perceived that it had not its effect upon him, he had recourse to his sword. The wound he gave himself not sufficing, he was obliged to desire a Gaulish soldier to put an end to his life. Dion says, he was killed by his own son.

Mithridates had reigned sixty years, and lived seventy-two. His greatest fear was to fall into the hands of the Romans, and to be led in triumph. To prevent that misfortune, he always carried poison about him, in order to escape that way, if other means should fail.
The apprehension he was in, left his son should de-deliver him up to Pompey, occasioned his taking the fatal resolution he executed so suddenly. It was generally said, the reason that the poison did not kill him, was his having taken antidotes so much, that his constituation was proof against it. But this is believed an error, and that it is impossible any remedy should be an universal antidote against all the different species of poison.

Pompey was at Jericho in Palestine, whether the differences between Harcanus and Aristobulus, of which we have spoken elsewhere, had carried him, when he received the first news of Mithridates's death.
It was brought him by express'd dispatched on purpose from Pontus with letters from his lieutenants.
Those express'd arriving with their lances crowned with laurels, which was customary only when they brought advice of some victory, or news of great importance and advantage, the army was very eager, and solicitous to know what it was. As they had only began to form their camp, and had not erected the tribunal, from which the general harangued the troops, without staying to raise one of turf, as was usual, because that would take up too much time, they made one of the packs of their carriage horses, upon which Pompey mounted without ceremony. He acquainted them with the death of Mithridates; and the manner of his killing himself; that his son Pharnaces submitted himself and dominions to the Romans, and thereby that tedious war, which had endured so long, was at length terminated. This gave both the army and general great subject to rejoice.
OF PONTUS.

Such was the end of Mithridates; a prince, says an historian, of whom it is difficult either to speak or be silent: Full of activity in war, of distinguished courage; sometimes very great by fortune, and always of invincible resolution; truly a general in his prudence and counsel, and a soldier in action and danger; a second Hannibal in his hatred of the Romans.

Cicero says of Mithridates, that after Alexander he was the greatest of king: (i) Ille rex post Alexandrum maximus. It is certain, that the Romans never had such a king in arms against them. Nor can we deny that he had his great qualities, a vast extent of mind, that aspired at every thing; a superiority of genius, capable of the greatest undertakings; a constancy of soul, that the severest misfortunes could not depress; an industry and bravery, inexhaustible in resources, and which, after the greatest losses, brought him again on the stage on a sudden, more powerful and formidable than ever. I cannot, however, believe, that he was a consummate general; that idea does not seem seem to result from his actions. He obtained great advantages at first; but against generals, without either merit or experience. When Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey, opposed him, it does not appear he acquired any great honour, either by his address in posting himself to advantage, by his presence of mind in unexpected emergency, or intrepidity in the heat of action. But should we admit him to have all the qualities of a great captain, he could not but be considered with horror, when we reflect upon the innumerable murders and parricides of his reign, and that inhuman cruelty, which regarded neither mother, wives, children, nor friends, and which sacrificed every thing to his insatiable ambition.

(i) Academ. Quest. l. iv. n. 8.

* Vir neque sfendidus neque dicendus sine cura: bello acerrimus, virtute eximius; aliquando fortuna temper animo maximus; consilia dux, miles manu: odio in Romanos Annibal. Vel. Paterc. l. ii. c. 18.

(k) Pompey being arrived in Syria, went directly to Damascus, with design to set out from thence to begin at length the war with Arabia. When Aretas, the king of that country, saw him upon the point of entering his dominions, he sent an embassy to make his submissions.

The troubles of Judæa employed Pompey some time. He returned afterwards into Syria, from whence he set out for Pontus. Upon his arrival at Amisus, he found the body of Mithridates there, which Pharnaces his son had sent to him; no doubt, to convince Pompey by his own eyes of the death of an enemy, who had occasioned him so many difficulties and fatigues. He had added great presents, in order to incline him in his favour. Pompey accepted the presents; but for the body of Mithridates, looking upon their enmity to be extinguished in death, he did it all the honours due to the remains of a king, sent it to the city of Sinope to be interred there with the kings of Pontus his ancestors, who had long been buried in that place, and ordered the sums that were necessary for the solemnity of a royal funeral.

In this last journey he took possession of all the places in the hands of thole, to whom Mithridates had con-fided fided them. He found immense riches in some of them, especially at Telaurus, where part of Mithridates’s most valuable effects and precious jewels were kept: His principal arsenal was also in the same place. Amongst those rich things were two thousand cups of onyx, set and adorned with gold; with so prodigious a quantity of all kinds of plate, fine moveables, and furniture of war for man and horse, that it cost the quaestor, or treasurer of the army, thirty days entire in taking the inventory of them.

Pompey granted Pharnaces the kingdom of Bosphorus, in reward of his parricide, declared him friend and ally of the Roman people, and marched into the province of Asia, in order to winter at Ephesus. He gave each of his soldiers fifteen hundred drachmas, (about 37l. sterling) and to the officers according to their several posts. The total sum, to which his liberalities amounted, all raised out of the spoils of the enemy, was sixteen thousand talents; that is to say, about two million, four hundred thousand pounds; besides which, he had twenty thousand more (three millions) to put into the treasury at Rome, upon the day of his entry.

His triumph continued two days, and was celebrated with extraordinary magnificence. Pompey caused three hundred and twenty-four captives of the highest distinction to march before his chariot: Amongst whom were Aristobulus, king of Judæa, with his son Antigonus; Olthaces, king of Colchos; Tigranes, the son of Tigranes king of Armenia; the sister, five sons, and two daughters of Mithridates. For want of that king’s person, his throne, sceptre, and gold busto of eight cubits, or twelve feet, in height, were carried in triumph.
Sect. I. Ptolemaeus Auletes had been placed upon the throne of Egypt in the room of Alexander. He is declared the friend and ally of the Roman people by the credit of Caesar and Pompey, which he purchases at a very great price. In consequence, he loads his subjects with imposts. He is expelled the throne. The Alexandrians make his daughter Berenice queen. He goes to Rome, and by money obtains the voices of the heads of the commonwealth for his re-establishment. He is opposed by an oracle of the Sibyl's; notwithstanding which, Gabinius sets him upon the throne by force of arms, where he remains till his death. The famous Cleopatra, and her brother, very young, succeed him.

We have seen in what manner Ptolemaeus Auletes ascended the throne of Egypt. Alexander, his predecessors, upon his being expelled by his subjects, withdrew to Tyre, where he died some time after. As he left no issue, nor any other legitimate prince of the blood royal, he made the Roman people his heirs. The senate, for the reasons I have repeated elsewhere, did not judge it proper, at that time, to take possession of the dominions left them by Alexander's will; but to shew that they did not renounce their right, they resolved to call in part of the inheritance, and sent deputies to Tyre, to demand a sum of money left there by that king at his death.

The pretensions of the Roman people were under no restrictions; and it had been a very insecure establishment to possess a state, to which they believed they had so just a claim; unless some means were found to make them renounce it. All the kings of Egypt had been friends and allies of Rome. To get himself declared an ally by the Romans, was a certain means to his being authentically acknowledged king of Egypt by them. But by how much the more important that qualification was to him, so much the more difficult was it for him to obtain it. His predecessor's will was still fresh in the memory of every body; and as princes are seldom pardoned for defects, which do not suit their condition, though they are often spared for those that are much more hurtful, the surname of player on the flute, which he had drawn upon himself, had ranked him as low in the esteem of the Romans, as before in that of the Egyptians.

(n) He did not, however, despair of success in his undertakings. All the methods, which he took for the attainment of his end, were a long time ineffectual; and it is likely they would always have been so, if Cæsar had never been consul. That ambitious spirit, who believed all means and expediants just that conduced to his ends, being immensely in debt, and finding that king disposed to merit by money what he could not obtain by right, sold him the alliance of Rome, at as dear a price as he was willing to buy it; and received for the purchase, as well for himself as for Pompey, whose credit was necessary to him for obtaining the people's consent, almost fix thousand thousand talents, that is to say, almost nine hundred thousand pounds. At this price he was declared the friend and ally of the Roman people.

Though that prince's yearly revenues were twice the amount of this sum, he could not immediately raise the money, without exceedingly over-taxing his subjects. They were already highly discontented by his not claiming the isle of Cyprus, as an ancient appenage of Egypt, and in case of refusal, declaring war against the Romans. In this disposition the extraordinary imposts he was obliged to exact, having finally exasperated them, they rose with so much violence, that he was forced to fly for the security of his life. He concealed his route so well, that the Egyptians either believed, or feigned to believe, that he had perished. They declared Berenice, the eldest of his three daughters, queen, though he had two sons, because they were both much younger than her.

Ptolemy, however, having landed at the isle of Rhodes, which was in his way to Rome, was informed that Cato, who after his death was called Cato of Utica, was also arrived there some time before. That prince, being glad of the opportunity to confer with him upon his own affairs, sent immediately to let him know his arrival; expecting that he would come directly to visit him. We may here see an instance of Roman grandeur, or rather haughtiness. Cato ordered him to be told, that if he had any thing to say to him, he might come to him: if he thought fit. Cato did not vouchsafe so much as to rise, when Ptolemy entered his chamber, and saluting him only as a common man, bade him sit down. The king, though in some confusion upon this reception, could not but admire, how so much haughtiness and state could unite in the same person with the simplicity and modesty that appeared in his habit and all his equipage. But he was very much surprized, when, upon explaining himself, Cato blamed him him in direct terms, for quitting the finest kingdom in the world, to expose himself to the pride and insatiable avarice of the Roman grandees, and to suffer a thousand indignities. He did not scruple to tell him, that though he should sell all Egypt, he would not have sufficient to satisfy their avidity. He advised him therefore to return to Egypt, and reconcile himself with his subjects; adding, that he was ready to accompany him thither, and offering him his mediation and good offices.

(o) Plut. in Cato Utic. p. 776.

Ptolemy, upon this discourse, recovered as out of a dream, and having maturely considered what the wise Roman had told him, perceived the error he had committed, in quitting his kingdom, and entertained thoughts of returning to it. But the friends he had with him, being gained by Pompey to make him go to Rome, (one may easily guess with what views) dissuaded him from following Cato's good counsel. He had time enough to repent it, when he found himself in that proud city reduced to solicit his business from gate to gate, like a private person.

(2) Cæsar, upon whom his principal hopes were founded, was not at Rome: He was at that time making war in Gaul. But Pompey, who was there, gave him an apartment in his house, and omitted nothing to serve him. Besides the money he had received from that prince, in conjunction with Cæsar, Ptolemy had afterwards cultivated his friendship by various services, which he had rendered him during the war with Mithridates, and had maintained eight thousand horse for him in that of Judæa. Having therefore made his complaint to the senate of the rebellion of his subjects, he demanded that they should oblige them to return to their obedience, as the Romans were engaged to do by the alliance granted him. Pompey's faction obtained him their compliance. The consul Lentulus, to whom Cilicia, separated from Egypt only by the coast of Syria, had fallen by by lot, was charged with the re-establishment of Ptolemy upon the throne.

But before his consulship expired, the Egyptians, having been informed that their king was not dead as they believed, and that he was gone to Rome, sent thither a solemn embassy, to justify the revolt before the senate. That embassy consisted of more than an hundred persons, of whom the chief was a celebrated philosopher, named Dion, who had considerable friends at Rome. Ptolemy having received advice of this, found means to destroy most of those ambassadors, either by poison or the sword, and intimidated those so much, whom he could neither corrupt nor kill, that they were afraid either to acquit themselves of their commission, or to demand justice for so many murders. But as all the world knew this cruelty, it made him as highly odious as he was before contemptible: And his immense profusions, in gaining the poorest and most self-interested senators, became so publick, that nothing else was talked of throughout the city.

So notorious a contempt of the laws, and such an excess of audacity, excited the indignation of all the persons of integrity in the senate. M. Favonius the Stoick philosopher was the first in it, who declared himself against Ptolemy. Upon his request it was resolved, that Dion should be ordered to attend, in order to their knowing the truth from his own mouth. But the king's party, composed of that of Pompey and Lentulus, of such as he had corrupted with money, and of those who had lent him sums to corrupt others, acted so openly in his favour, that Dion did not dare to appear; and Ptolemy, having caused him also to be killed some small time after, though he who did the murder was accused juridically, the king was discharged of it, upon maintaining, that he had just cause for the action.

Whether that prince thought, that nothing further at Rome demanded his presence, or apprehended receiving some affront, hated as he was, if he continued there
there any longer, he set out from thence some few days after, and retired to Ephesus, into the temple of the goddess, to wait there the decision of his destiny.

His affair, in effect, made more noise than ever at Rome. One of the tribunes of the people, named C. Cato, an active, enterprising young man, who did not want eloquence, declared himself, in frequent harangues, against Ptolemy and Lentulus, and was hearkened to by the people with singular pleasure, and extraordinary applause.

In order to put a new scheme in motion, he waited till the new consuls were elected, and as soon as Lentulus had quitted that office, he proposed to the people an oracle of the Sibyl's, which imported: If a king of Egypt, having occasion for aid, applies to you, you shall not refuse him your amity: But however, you shall not give him any troops; for if you do, you will suffer and hazard much.

The usual form was to communicate this kind of oracles first to the senate, in order that it might be examined, whether they were proper to be divulged. But Cato, apprehending that the king's faction might occasion the passing a resolution there to suppress this, which was so opposite to that prince, immediately presented the priests, with whom the sacred books were deposited, to the people, and obliged them, by the authority which his office of tribune gave him, to expose what they had found in them to the publick, without demanding the senate's opinion.

This was a new stroke of thunder to Ptolemy and Lentulus. The words of the Sibyl were too express not to make all the impression upon the vulgar, which their enemies desired. So that Lentulus, whose consulship was expired, not being willing to receive the affront to his face, of having the senate's decree revoked, by which he was appointed to reinstate Ptolemy, set out immediately for his province in quality of proconsul.

He was not deceived. Some days after, one of the new consuls, named Marcellinus, the declared enemy of Pompey, having proposed the oracle to the senate, it was decreed, that regard should be had to it, and that it appeared dangerous for the commonwealth to re-establish the king of Egypt by force.

We must not believe there was any person in the senate so simple, or rather so stupid, to have any faith in such an oracle. Nobody doubted, but that it had been contrived for the present conjuncture, and was the work of some secret intrigue of policy. But it had been published and approved in the assembly of the people, credulous and superstitious to excess, and the senate could pass no other judgment upon it.

This new incident obliged Ptolemy to change his measures. Seeing that Lentulus had too many enemies at Rome, he abandoned the decree, by which he had been commissioned for his re-establishment, and demanding by Ammonius his ambassador, whom he had left at Rome, that Pompey should be appointed to execute the same commission; because it not being possible to execute it with open force, upon account of the oracle, he judged with reason, that it was necessary to substitute, in the room of force, a person of great authority. And Pompey was at that time at the highest pitch of his glory, from his success in having destroyed Mithridates, the greatest and most powerful king Asia had seen since Alexander.

The affair was deliberated upon in the senate, and debated with great vivacity by the different parties that rose up in it. (q) The difference of opinions caused several sittings to be lost without any determination. Cicero never quitted the interest of Lentulus his intimate friend, who, during his consulship, had infinitely contributed to his being recalled from banishment. But what means was there to render him any service, in the condition things stood? And what could that proconsul do against a great kingdom, without using the force of arms, which was expressly forbad by the oracle? In this manner thought people of little wit and subtlety, that were not used to consider things in dif-

(q) Cíc. ad Famil. I. i. epist. 7.
different lights. The oracle only prohibited giving the king any troops for his re-establishment. Could not Lentulus have left him in some place near the frontiers, and went however with a good army to besiege Alexandria. After he had taken it he might have returned, leaving a strong garrison in the place, and then sent the king thither, who would have found all things disposed for his reception without violence or troops. This was Cicero’s advice; to confirm which, I shall repeat his own words, taken from a letter wrote by him at that time to Lentulus. “You are the best judge,” says he, “as you are master of Cilicia and Cyprus, of what you can undertake and effect. If it seems practicable for you to take Alexandria, and possess yourself of the rest of Egypt, it is, without doubt, both for your own and the honour of the commonwealth, that you should go thither with your fleet and army, leaving the king at Ptolemais, or in some other neighbouring place; in order, that after you have appeased the revolt, and left good garrisons where necessary, that prince may safely return thither. * In this manner you will reestablish him, according to the senate’s first decree, and he be restored without troops, which our zealots assure us is the sense of the Sibyl.” Would one believe that a grave magistrate, in an affair so important as that in the present question, should be capable of an evasion, which appears so little consistent with the integrity and probity upon which Cicero valued himself? It was, because he reckoned the oracle only pretended to be the Sibyl’s, as indeed it was, that is to say, a mere contrivance and imposture.

Lentulus, stopped by the difficulties of that enterprise, which were great and real, was afraid to engage in it, and took the advice Cicero gave him in the conclusion of his letter, where he represented: “That

* Ita fore ut per te restitutur, tur, quemadmodum homines requemadmodum initio senatus celsius Sibylla placere dixerunt. fuit; & sine multitudine reduc-
THE HISTORY

"all the world would judge of his conduct from the event: That therefore he had only to take his measures so well, as to assure his success, and that otherwise he would do better not to undertake it."

Gabinius, who commanded in Syria in the quality of proconsul, was less apprehensive and cautious. Though every proconsul was prohibited by an express law to quit his province, or declare any war whatsoever, even upon the nearest borderer, without an express order of the senate, he had marched to the aid of Mithridates, prince of Parthia, expelled Media by the king his brother, which kingdom had fallen to him by division. (r) He had already passed the Euphrates with his army for that purpose, when Ptolemy joined him with letters from Pompey, their common friend and patron, who had very lately been declared consul for the year ensuing. By those letters he conjured Gabinius to do his utmost in favour of the proposals that prince should make him, with regard to his re-establishment in his kingdom. However dangerous that conduct might be, the authority of Pompey, and still more, the hope of considerable gain, made Gabinius begin to waver. The lively remonstrances of Anthony, who sought occasions to signalize himself, and was besides inclined to please Ptolemy, whose intreaties flattered his ambition, fully determined him. This was the famous Mark Anthony, who afterwards formed the second triumvirate with Octavius and Lepidus. Gabinius had engaged him to follow him into Syria, by giving him the command of his cavalry. The more dangerous the enterprize, the more right Gabinius thought he had to make Ptolemy pay dear for it. The latter, who found no difficulty in agreeing to any terms, offered him for himself and the army ten thousand talents, or fifteen hundred thousand pounds, the greatest part to be advanced immediately.

A. M. 3949.
Ant. J. C. 55.

Ex eventu homines de tuo ius regni potiri, non esse consuliflio effe judicaturos, videmus dum; in dubium non esse co-
—Nos quidem hoc sentimus; mecum, ii exploratum tibi fer, posse te l—
OF EGYPT.

mediately in ready money, and the rest as soon as he should be reinstated. Gabinius accepted the offer without hesitation.

(5) Egypt had continued under the government of queen Berenice. As soon as she ascended the throne, the Egyptians had sent to offer the crown and Berenice to Antiochus Asiaticus in Syria, who, on his mother Selena's side, was the nearest heir male. The ambassadors found him dead, and returned: They brought an account, that his brother Seleucus, surnamed Cybiosafetes, was still alive. The same offers were made to him, which he accepted. He was a prince of mean and fordid inclinations, and had no thoughts but of amassing money. His first care was, to cause the body of Alexander the Great to be put into a coffin of glass, in order to seize that of gold, in which it had lain untouched till then. This action, and many others of a like nature, having rendered him equally odious to his queen and subjects, she caused him to be strangled soon after. He was the last prince of the race of the Seleucides. She afterwards espoused Archelaus, high-priest of Comana in Pontus, who called himself the son of the great Mithridates, though, in effect, only the son of that prince's chief general.

(6) Gabinius, after having repassed the Euphrates, and crossed Palestine, marched directly into Egypt. What was most to be feared in this war, was the way by which they must necessarily march to Pelusium. For they could not avoid passing plains covered with sands of such a depth, as was terrible to think on, and so dry, that there was not a single drop of water the whole length of the moors of Serbonida. Anthony, who was sent before with the horse, not only seized the passes, but having taken Pelusium, the key of Egypt on that side, with the whole garrison, he made the way secure for the rest of the army, and gave his general great hopes of the expedition.

R 3

The enemy found a considerable advantage in the desire of glory which possessed Anthony. For Ptolemy was no sooner entered Pelusium, than, out of the violence of his hate and resentment, he would have put all the Egyptians in it to the sword. But Anthony, who rightly judged that act of cruelty would revert upon himself, opposed it, and prevented Ptolemy from executing his design. In all the battles and encounters which immediately followed one another, he not only gave proofs of his great valour, but distinguished himself by all the conduct of a great general.

As soon as Gabinius received advice of Anthony's good success, he entered the heart of Egypt. It was in winter, when the waters of the Nile are very low, the properest time in consequence for the conquest of it. Archelaus, who was brave, able, and experienced, did all that could be done in his defence, and disputed his ground very well with the enemy. After he quitted the city, in order to march against the Romans, when it was necessary to encamp, and break ground for the entrenchments, the Egyptians, accustomed to live an idle and voluptuous life, raised an outcry, that Archelaus should employ the mercenaries in such work at the expense of the publick. What could be expected from such troops in a battle? They were, in effect, soon put to the route. Archelaus was killed, fighting valiantly. Anthony, who had been his particular friend and guest, having found his body upon the field of battle, adorned it in a royal manner, and solemnized his obsequies with great magnificence. By this action he left behind him a great name in Alexandria, and acquired amongst the Romans, who served with him in this war, the reputation of a man of singular valour and exceeding generosity.

Egypt was soon reduced, and obliged to receive Auletes, who took entire possession of his dominions. In order to strengthen him in it, Gabinius left him some Roman troops for the guard of his person. These troops contracted at Alexandria the manners and and customs of the country, and gave into the luxury and effeminacy which reigned there in almost every city. Auletes put his daughter Berenice to death, for having worn the crown during his exile; and afterwards got rid, in the same manner, of all the rich persons who had been of the adverse party to him. He had occasion for the confiscation of their estates, to make up the sum he had promised to Gabinius, to whose aid he was indebted for his re-establishment.

(u) The Egyptians suffered all these violations without murmuring. But some days after, a Roman soldier having accidentally killed a cat, neither the fear of Gabinius, nor the authority of Ptolemy, could prevent the people from tearing him to pieces upon the spot, to avenge the insult done to the gods of the country; for cats were of that number.

(x) Nothing farther is known in relation to the life of Ptolemy Auletes, except that C. Rabirius Posthumus, who had either lent him, or caused to be lent him, the greatest part of the sums he had borrowed at Rome, having gone to him, in order to his being paid when he was entirely reinstated; that prince gave him to understand, that he despaired of satisfying him, unless he would consent to take upon him the care of his revenues, by which means he might reimburse himself by little and little with his own hands. The unfortunate creditor having accepted that offer, out of fear of losing his debt if he refused it, the king soon found a colour for causing him to be imprisoned, though one of the oldest and dearest of Cæsar’s friends, and though Pompey was in some measure security for the debt, as the money was lent, and the obligations executed, in his presence, and by his procurement, in a country-house of his near Alba.

Rabirius thought himself too happy in being able to escape from prison and Egypt, more miserable than he went thither. To complete his disgrace, he was prosecuted in form as soon as he returned to Rome, for having aided Ptolemy in corrupting the senate, by the sums he had lent him for that use; of having dishonoured his quality of Roman knight, by the employment he had accepted in Egypt; and lastly, of having shared in the money which Gabinius brought from thence, with whom it was alleged, he had a fellow-feeling. Cicero’s discourse in his defence, which we still have, is an eternal monument of the ingratitude and perfidy of this unworthy king.

(y) Ptolemy Auletes died in the peaceable possession of the kingdom of Egypt, about four years after his re-establishment. He left two sons and two daughters. He gave his crown to the eldest son and daughter, and ordered by his will, that they should marry together, according to the custom of that house, and govern jointly. And because they were both very young (for the daughter, who was the eldest, was only seventeen years of age) he left them under the tuition of the Roman senate. This was the famous Cleopatra, whose history it remains for us to relate. (z) We find the people appointed Pompey the young king’s guardian, who some years after so basely ordered him to be put to death.

(y) Caesar de Bello Civ. i. v, (z) Eutrop. i. vi.
LITTLE is known of the beginning of Cleopatra’s and her brother’s reign. That prince was a minor, under the tuition of Pothinus the eunuch, and of Achillas the general of his army. Those two ministers, no doubt, to engross all affairs to themselves, had deprived Cleopatra, in the king’s name, of the share in the sovereignty left her by the will of Auletes. Injured in this manner, she went into Syria and Palestine, to raise troops in those countries, in order to assert her rights by force of arms.

It was exactly at this conjunction of the difference between the brother and sister, that Pompey, after having lost the battle of Pharadalia, fled to Egypt; conceiving, that he should find there an open and assured asylum in his misfortunes. He had been the protector of Auletes, the father of the reigning king, and it was solely to his credit he was indebted for his re-establishment. He was in hopes of finding the son grateful, and of being powerfully assisted by him.

When

When he arrived, Ptolemy was upon the coast with his army, between Pelusium and mount Cælius, and Cleopatra at no great distance, at the head of her troops also. Pompey, on approaching the coast, sent to Ptolemy to demand permission to land, and enter his kingdom.

The two ministers, Pothinus and Achillas, consulted with Theodotus, the rhetorician, the young king’s præceptor, and with some others, what answer they should make; Pompey, in the mean time, waited the result of that council, and chose rather to expose himself to the decision of three unworthy persons, that governed the prince, than to owe his safety to Cæsar, who was his father-in-law, and the greatest of the Romans. This council differed in opinion; some were for receiving him, others for having him told to seek a retreat elsewhere. Theodotus approved neither of these methods, and displaying all his eloquence, undertook to demonstrate, that there was no other choice to be made, than that of ridding the world of him. His reason was, because if they received him, Cæsar would never forgive the having assisted his enemy: If they sent him away without aid, and affairs should take a turn in his favour, he would not fail to revenge himself upon them for their refusal. That therefore there was no security for them, but in putting him to death, by which means they would gain Cæsar’s friendship, and prevent the other from ever doing them any hurt: For, said he, according to the proverb, Dead men do not bite.

This advice carried it, as being, in their sense, the wisest and most safe. Septimus, a Roman officer in the service of the king of Egypt, and some others, were charged with putting it into execution. They went to take Pompey on board a shallop, under the pretext that great vessels could not approach the shore without difficulty. The troops were drawn up on the sea-side, as with design to do honour to Pompey, with Ptolemy at their head. The perfidious Septimus tendered his hand to Pompey, in the name of his master, and and bade him come to a king, his friend, whom he ought to regard as his ward and son. Pompey then embraced his wife Cornelia, who was already in tears for his death; and after having repeated these verses of Sophocles, Every man that enters the court of a tyrant becomes his slave, though free before, he went into the shallop. When they saw themselves near the shore, they stabbed him before the king's eyes, cut off his head, and threw his body upon the strand, where it had no other funeral than what one of his freed-men gave it, with the assistance of an old Roman, who was there by chance. They raised him a wretched funeral-pile, and covered him with some fragments of an old wreck, that had been driven ashore there.

Cornelia had seen Pompey mangled before her eyes. It is easier to imagine the condition of a woman in the height of grief from so tragical an object, than to describe it. Those who were in her galley, and in two other ships in company with it, made the coast resound with the cries they raised, and weighing anchor immediately, set sail before the wind, which blew fresh as soon as they got out to sea: This prevented the Egyptians, who were getting ready to chase them, from pursuing their design.

Caesar made all possible haste to arrive in Egypt, whither he suspected Pompey had retired, and where he was in hopes of finding him alive. That he might be there the sooner, he carried very few troops with him; only eight hundred horse, and three thousand two hundred foot. He left the rest of his army in Greece and Asia minor, under his lieutenant-generals, with orders to make all the advantages of his victory it would admit, and to establish his authority in all those countries. As for his person, confiding in his reputation, and the success of his arms at Pharsalia, and reckoning all places secure for him, he made no scruple to land at Alexandria with the few people he could take with him.
he had. He was very nigh paying dear for his temerity.

Upon his arrival he was informed of Pompey's death, and found the city in great confusion. Theodotus, believing he should do him an exceeding pleasure, presented him the head of that illustrious fugitive. He wept at seeing it, and turned away his eyes from a spectacle that gave him horror. He even caused it to be interred with all the usual solemnities. And the better to express his esteem for Pompey, and the respect he had for his memory, he received with great kindness, and loaded with favours, all who had adhered to him then in Egypt; and wrote to his friends at Rome, that the highest and most grateful advantage of his victory, was to find every day some new occasion to preserve the lives, and do services to some citizens, who had borne arms against him.

The commotions increased every day at Alexandria, and abundance of murders were committed there; the city having neither law nor government, because without a master. Cæsar, perceiving that the small number of troops with him were far from being sufficient to awe an insolent and seditious populace, gave orders for the legions he had in Asia to march thither. It was not in his power to leave Egypt, because of the Etesian winds, which in that country blow continually in the dog-days, and prevent all vessels from quitting Alexandria; those winds are then always full north. Not to lose time, he demanded the payment of the money due to him from Auletes, and took cognizance of the difference between Ptolemy and his sister Cleopatra.

We have seen, that when Cæsar was consul for the first time, Auletes had gained him, by the promise of six thousand talents, and by that means had assured himself of the throne, and been declared the friend and ally of the Romans. The king had paid him only a part of that sum, and had given him an obligation for the remainder.

Cæsar therefore demanded what was unpaid, which he wanted for the subsistence of his troops, and exacted with rigour. Pothinus, Ptolemy's first minister, employed various stratagems to make this rigour appear still greater than it really was. He plundered the temples of all the gold and silver to be found in them, and made the king, and all the great persons of the kingdom, eat out of earthen or wooden vessels; insinuating underhand, that Cæsar had seized upon all their silver and gold plate, in order to render him odious to the populace by such reports, which did not want appearance, though entirely groundless.

But what finally incensed the Egyptians against Cæsar, and made them at last take arms, was the haughtiness with which he acted as judge between Ptolemy and Cleopatra, in causing them to be cited to appear before him for the decision of their difference. We shall soon see upon what he founded his authority for proceeding in that manner. He therefore decreed in form, that they should disband their armies, should appear and plead their cause before him, and receive such sentence as he should pass between them. This order was looked upon in Egypt as a violation of the royal dignity, which being independent, acknowledged no superior, and could be judged by no tribunal. Cæsar replied to these complaints, that he acted only in virtue of being arbiter by the will of Auletes, who had put his children under the tuition of the senate and people of Rome, of which the whole authority then vested in his person, in quality of consul. That as guardian, he had a right to arbitrate between them; and that all he pretended to, as executor of the will, was to establish peace between the brother and sister. This explanation having facilitated the affair, it was at length brought before Cæsar, and advocates were chosen to plead the cause.

But Cleopatra, who knew Cæsar's foible, believed her presence would be more persuasive than any advocate she could employ with her judge. She caused him to be told, that she perceived, that those she employed in her behalf, betrayed her, and demanded his permission to appear in person. Plutarch says, it was Cæsar himself who pressed her to come and plead her cause.

That princess took nobody with her, of all her friends, but Apollodorus the Sicilian, got into a little boat, and arrived at the bottom of the walls of the citadel of Alexandria, when it was quite dark at night. Finding that there was no means of entering without being known, she thought of this stratagem. She laid herself at length in the midst of a bundle of clothes. Apollodorus wrapped it up in a cloth, tied it up with a thong, and in that manner carried it through the port of the citadel to Cæsar's apartment, who was far from being displeased with the stratagem. The first sight of so beautiful a person, had all the effect upon him she had desired.

Cæsar sent the next day for Ptolemy, and pressed him to take her again, and be reconciled with her. Ptolemy saw plainly that his judge was become his adversary; and having learnt that his sister was then in the palace, and in Cæsar's own apartment, he quitted it in the utmost fury, and in the open street took the diadem off his head, tore it to pieces, and threw it on the ground; crying out, with his face bathed in tears, that he was betrayed, and relating the circumstances to the multitude who assembled round him. In a moment the whole city was in motion. He put himself at the head of the populace, and led them tumultuously to charge Cæsar with all the fury natural on such occasions.

The Roman soldiers, whom Cæsar had with him, secured the person of Ptolemy. But as all the rest, who knew nothing of what passed, were dispersed in the several quarters of that great city, Cæsar had infallibly been overpowered, and torn to pieces by that furious populace, if he had not had the presence of mind to shew himself to them from a part of the palace, so high, that he had nothing to fear upon it. From hence he assured them, that they would be fully satisfied satisfied with the judgment he should pass. Those promises appeased the Egyptians a little.

The next day he brought out Ptolemy and Cleopatra into an assembly of the people, summoned by his order. After having caused the will of the late king to be read, he decreed, as tutor and arbitrator, that Ptolemy and Cleopatra should reign jointly in Egypt, according to the intent of that will; and that Ptolemy the younger son, and Arsinoe the younger daughter, should reign in Cyprus. He added the last article to appease the people; for it was purely a gift he made them, as the Romans were actually in possession of that island. But he feared the effects of the Alexandrians fury; and to extricate himself out of danger, was the reason of his making that concession.

The whole world were satisfied and charmed with this decree, except only Pothinus. As it was he who had occasioned the breach between Cleopatra and her brother, and the expulsion of that princess from the throne, he had reason to apprehend, that the consequences of this accommodation would prove fatal to him. To prevent the effect of Cæsar's decree, he inspired the people with new subjects of jealousy and discontent. He gave out, that Cæsar had only granted this decree by force, and through fear, which would not long subsist; and that his true design was to place only Cleopatra upon the throne. This was what the Egyptians exceedingly feared, not being able to endure that a woman should govern them alone, and have all authority to herself. When he saw that the people came into his views, he made Achillas advance at the head of the army from Pelusium, in order to drive Cæsar out of Alexandria. The approach of that army put all things into their first confusion. Achillas, who had twenty thousand good troops, despised Cæsar's small number, and believed he should overpower him immediately. But Cæsar posted his men so well in the streets, and upon the avenues of the quarter in his possession, that he found no difficulty in supporting their attack.

When
When they saw they could not force him, they changed their measures, and marched towards the port, with design to make themselves masters of the fleet, to cut off his communication with the sea, and to prevent him, in consequence, from receiving succours and convoys on that side. But Cæsar again frustrated their design, by causing the Egyptian fleet to be set on fire, and by possessing himself of the tower of Pharos, which he garrisoned. By this means he preserved and secured his communication with the sea, without which he had been ruin'd effectually. Some of the vessels on fire came so near the quay, that the flames caught the neighbouring houses, from whence they spread throughout the whole quarter, called Bruchion. It was at this time the famous library was consum'd, which had been the work of so many kings, and in which there were four hundred thousand volumes. What a loss was this to literature!

Cæsar, seeing so dangerous a war upon his hands, sent into all the neighbouring countries for aid. He wrote, amongst others, to Domitius Calvinus, whom he had left to command in Asia minor, and signified to him his danger. That general immediately detached two legions, the one by land, and the other by sea. That which went by sea arrived in time; the other, that marched by land, did not go thither at all. Before it had got there the war was at an end. But Cæsar was best serv'd by Mithridates the Pergamenian, whom he sent into Syria and Cilicia. For he brought him the troops which extricated him out of danger, as we shall see in the sequel.

Whilst he waited the aids he had sent for, that he might not fight an army so superior in number, till he thought fit, he caused the quarter in his possession to be fortified. He surrounded it with walls, and flanked it with towers and other works. Those lines included the palace, a theatre very near it, which he made use of as a citadel, and the way that led to the port.
Ptolemy all this while was in Cæsar's hands; and Pothinus, his governor and first minister, who was of intelligence with Achillas, gave him advice of all that passed, and encouraged him to push the siege with vigour. One of his letters was at last intercepted, and his treason being thereby discovered, Cæsar ordered him to be put to death.

Ganymedes, another eunuch of the palace, who educated Arsinoe the youngest of the king's sisters, apprehending the same fate, because he had shared in that treason, carried off the young princes, and escaped into the camp of the Egyptians; who not having, till then, any of the royal family at their head, were overjoyed at her presence, and proclaimed her queen. But Ganymedes, who entertained thoughts of supplanting Achillas, caused that general to be accused of having given up the fleet to Cæsar, that had been set on fire by the Romans, which occasioned that general's being put to death, and the command of the army to be transferred to him. He took also upon him the administration of all other affairs; and undoubtedly did not want capacity for the employment of a prime-minister, probity only excepted, which is often reckoned little or no qualification. For he had all the necessary penetration and activity, and contrived a thousand artful stratagems to distress Cæsar during the continuance of this war.

For instance, he found means to spoil all the fresh water in his quarter, and was very near destroying him by that means. For there was no other fresh water in Alexandria, but that of the Nile. * In every house were vaulted reservoirs, where it was kept. Every year, upon the great swell of the Nile, the water of that river came in by a canal, which had been cut for that use, and by a sluice, made on purpose, was turned into the vaulted reservoirs, which were the cisterns of the city, where it grew clear by degrees. The masters of houses and their families drank of this water; but the poorer sort of people were forced to drink the running water, which was muddy and very unwholesome; for there were no springs in the city. Those caverns were made in such a manner, that they all had communication with each other. This provision of water served for the whole year. Every house had an opening, not unlike the mouth of a well, through which the water was taken up either in buckets or pitchers. Ganymedes caused all the communications with the caverns in the quarters of Cæfar to be stopped; and then found means to turn the sea-water into the latter, and thereby spoiled all his fresh water. As soon as they perceived that the water was spoiled, Cæfar's soldiers made such a noise, and raised such a tumult, that he would have been obliged to abandon his quarter, very much to his disadvantage, if he had not immediately thought of ordering wells to be sunk, where, at last, springs were found, which supplied them with water enough to make them amends for that which was spoiled.

* There are to this day exactly the which are filled once a year, as of same kind of caves at Alexandria, old. Thévenot's travels.

After that, upon Cæfar's receiving advice, that the legion Calvinius had sent by sea was arrived upon the coast of Libya, which was not very distant, he advanced with his whole fleet, to convoy it safely to Alexandria. Ganymedes was apprized of this, and immediately assembled all the Egyptian ships he could get, in order to attack him upon his return. A battle actually ensued between the two fleets. Cæfar had the advantage, and brought his legion without danger into the port of Alexandria; and, had not the night came on, the ships of the enemy would not have escaped.

To repair that loss, Ganymedes drew together all the ships in the mouths of the Nile, and formed a new fleet, with which he entered the port of Alexandria. A second action was unavoidable. The Alexandrians climbed in throngs to the tops of the houses next the port, to be spectators to the fight, and expected the success with fear and trembling; lifting up their hands to heaven, to implore the assistance of the gods. The all of the Romans was at stake, to whom there was no resource left, if they lost this battle. Cæsar was again victorious. The Rhodians, by their valour and skill in naval affairs, contributed exceedingly to this victory.

Cæsar, to make the best of it, endeavoured to seize the isle of Pharos, where he landed his troops after the battle, and to possess himself of the mole, called the Hepta斯塔dion, by which it was joined to the continent. But after having obtained several advantages, he was repulsed with the loss of more than eight hundred men, and was very near falling himself in his retreat. For the ship, in which he had designed to get off, being ready to sink with the too great number of people who had entered it with him, he threw himself into the sea, and with great difficulty swam to the next ship. Whilst he was in the sea, he held one hand above the water, in which were papers of consequence, and swam with the other, so that they were not spoiled.

The Alexandrians seeing that ill success itself only served to give Cæsar's troops new courage, entertained thoughts of making peace, or at least dissembled such a disposition. They sent deputies to demand their king of him; assuring him, that his presence alone would put an end to all differences. Cæsar, who well knew their subtle and deceitful character, was not at a loss to comprehend their professions; but as he hazarded nothing in giving them up their king's person, and if they failed in their promises, the fault would be entirely on their side, he thought it incumbent on him to grant their demand. He exhorted the young prince to take the advantage of this opportunity to inspire his subjects with sentiments of peace and equity; to redress the evils, with which a war, very imprudently undertaken, distressed his dominions; to approve himself worthy of the confidence he reposed in him, by giving him his liberty; and to shew his gratitude for the services he had rendered his father.

S 2 Ptolemy,
*Ptolemy, early instructed by his masters in the art of dissimulation and deceit, begged of Cæsar, with tears in his eyes, not to deprive him of his presence, which was a much greater satisfaction to him, than to reign over others. The sequel soon explained how much sincerity there was in those tears and professions of amity. He was no sooner at the head of his troops, than he renewed hostilities with more vigour than ever.
The Egyptians endeavoured, by the means of their fleet, to cut off Cæsar's provisions entirely. This occasioned a new fight at sea near Canopus, in which Cæsar was again victorious. When this battle was fought, Mithridates of Pergamus was upon the point of arriving with the army, which he was bringing to the aid of Cæsar.

(/) He had been sent into Syria and Cilicia to aftemle all the troops he could, and to march them to Egypt. He acquitted himself of his commission with such diligence and prudence, that he had soon formed a considerable army. Antipater, the Idumæan, contributed very much towards it. He had not only joined him with three thousand Jews, but engaged several neighbouring princes of Arabia and Cælophrya to send him troops. Mithridates, with Antipater, who accompanied him in person, marched into Egypt, and upon arriving before Pelusium, they carried that place by storm. They were indebted principally to Antipater's bravery for the taking of this city. For he was the first that mounted the breach, and got upon the wall, and thereby opened the way for those who followed him to carry the town.

On their route from thence to Alexandria, it was necessary to pass through the country of Onion, of which the Jews, who inhabited it, had seized all the passes. The army was there put to a stand, and their whole design was upon the point of miscarrying,

OF EGYPT.

If Antipater by his credit and that of Hyrcanus, from whom he brought them letters, had not engaged them to espouse Cæsar’s party. Upon the spreading of that news, the Jews of Memphis did the same, and Mithridates received from both all the provisions his army had occasion for. When they were near Delta, Ptolemy detached a flying army to dispute the passage of the Nile with them. A battle was fought in consequence. Mithridates put himself at the head of part of his army, and gave the command of the other to Antipater. Mithridates’s wing was soon broke, and obliged to give way; but Antipater, who had defeated the enemy on his side, came to his relief. The battle began afresh, and the enemy were defeated. Mithridates and Antipater pursued them, made a great slaughter, and regained the field of battle. They took even the enemy’s camp, and obliged those who remained to escape, by repassing the Nile.

Ptolemy then advanced with his whole army, in order to overpower the victors. Cæsar also marched to support them; and as soon as he had joined them, came directly to a decisive battle, in which he obtained a compleat victory. Ptolemy, in endeavouring to escape in a boat, was drowned in the Nile. Alexandria, and all Egypt, submitted to the victor.

Cæsar returned to Alexandria about the middle of January; and not finding any farther opposition to his orders, gave the crown of Egypt to Cleopatra, in conjunction with Ptolemy her other brother. This was in effect giving it to Cleopatra alone; for that young prince was only eleven years old. The passion, which Cæsar had conceived for that prince, was properly the sole cause of his embarking in so dangerous a war. He had by her one son, called Cæsario, whom Augustus caused to be put to death when he became master of Alexandria. His affection for Cleopatra kept him much longer in Egypt, than his affairs required. For though every thing was settled in that kingdom by the end of January, he did not leave it till the end of April, according to Appian, who says he stayed there nine months. He arrived there only about the end of July the year before.

(Caesar passed whole nights in feasting with Cleopatra. Having embarked with her upon the Nile, he carried her through the whole country with a numerous fleet; and would have penetrated into Ethiopia, if his army had not refused to follow him. He had resolved to have her brought to Rome, and to marry her; and intended to have caused a law to pass in the assembly of the people, by which the citizens of Rome should be permitted to marry such, and as many wives as they thought fit. Marius Cinna, the tribune of the people, declared, after his death, that he had prepared a harangue in order to propose that law to the people, not being able to refuse his offices to the earnest solicitation of Caesarius.

He carried Arsinoe, whom he had taken in this war, to Rome, and she walked in his triumph in chains of gold; but immediately after that solemnity he set her at liberty. He did not permit her, however, to return into Egypt, lest her presence should occasion new troubles, and frustrate the regulations he had made in that kingdom. She chose the province of Asia for her residence, at least it was there Anthony found her after the battle of Philippi, and caused her to be put to death at the instigation of her sister Cleopatra.

Before he left Alexandria, Caesarius, in gratitude for the aid he had received from the Jews, caused all the privileges they enjoyed to be confirmed; and ordered a column to be erected, on which, by his command, all those privileges were engraven with the decree of confirming them.

What at length made him quit Egypt, was the war with Pharnaces, king of the Cimmerian Bosporus, and son of Mithridates, the last king of Pontus.
OF EGYPT.

263

Pontus. He fought a great battle with him near the city of *Zela, defeated his whole army, and drove him out of the kingdom of Pontus. To denote the rapidity of his conquest, in writing to one of his friends, he made use of only these three words, Veni, vidi, vici; that is to say, I came, I saw, I conquered.

Sect. III. Cleopatra causes her young brother to be put to death, and reigns alone. The death of Julius Cæsar having made way for the triumvirate formed between Anthony, Lepidus, and young Cæsar, called also Octavius, Cleopatra declares herself for the triumvirs. She goes to Anthony at Tarsus, gains an absolute ascendant over him, and brings him with her to Alexandria. Anthony goes to Rome, where he espouses Octavia. He abandons himself again to Cleopatra, and after some expeditions returns to Alexandria, which he enters in triumph. He there celebrates the coronation of Cleopatra and her children. Open rupture between Cæsar and Anthony. The latter repudiates Octavia. The two fleets put to sea. Cleopatra determines to follow Anthony. Battle of Actium. Cleopatra flies, and draws Anthony after her. Cæsar's victory is compleat. He advances some time after against Alexandria, which makes no long resistance. Tragical death of Anthony and Cleopatra. Egypt is reduced into a province of the Roman empire.

Cæsar, after the war of Alexandria, had set Cleopatra upon the throne, and, for form only, had associated her brother with her, who at that time was only eleven years of age. During his minority, all power was in her hands. (i) When he attained his fifteenth year, which was the first time, when, according to the laws of the country, he was to govern for himself, and have a share in the royal authority, she poisoned him, and remained sole queen of Egypt.

* This was a city of Cappadocia.
In this interval Cæsar had been killed at Rome by the conspirators, at the head of which were Brutus and Cassius; and the triumvirate between Anthony, Lepidus, and Octavius Cæsar, had been formed, to avenge the death of Cæsar.

(k) Cleopatra declared herself without hesitation for the triumvirs. She gave Albienus, the consul, Dolabella’s lieutenant, four legions, which were the remains of Pompey’s and Cassius’s armies, and were part of the troops Cæsar had left with her for the guard of Egypt. She had also a fleet in readiness for sailing, but prevented by storms from setting out. Cassius made himself master of those four legions, and frequently solicited Cleopatra for aid, which she as often refused. She failed some time after with a numerous fleet, to join Anthony and Octavius. A violent storm occasioned the loss of a great number of her ships, and falling sick, she was obliged to return into Egypt.

(l) Anthony, after the defeat of Brutus and Cassius in the battle of Philippi, having passed over into Asia, in order to establish the authority of the triumvirate there, the kings, princes, and ambassadors of the East, came thither in throngs to make their court to him. He was informed, that the governors of Phœnicia, which was in the dependance of the kingdom of Egypt, had sent Cassius aid against Dolabella. He cited Cleopatra before him, to answer for the conduct of her governors; and sent one of his lieutenants to oblige her to come to him in Cilicia, whither he was going to assemble the states of that province. That step became very fatal to Anthony in its effects, and occasioned his ruin. His love for Cleopatra having awakened passions in him, till then concealed or asleep, inflamed them even to madness, and finally deadened and extinguished the few sparks of honour and virtue, he might perhaps still retain.

Cleopatra,

Cleopatra, assured of her charms, by the proof she had already so sufficiently made of them upon Julius Caesar, was in hopes, that she could also very easily captivate Anthony. And the more, because the former had known her only when she was very young, and had no experience of the world; whereas she was going to appear before Anthony at an age, wherein women, with the bloom of their beauty, unite the whole force of wit and address to treat and conduct the greatest affairs. Cleopatra was at that time five-and-twenty years old. She provided herself therefore with exceeding rich presents, great sums of money, and especially the most magnificent habits and ornaments; and with still higher hopes in her attractions, and the graces of her person, more powerful than dress, or even gold, she began her voyage.

Upon her way she received several letters from Anthony, who was at Tarfus, and, from his friends, pressing her to hasten her journey; but she only laughed at their instances, and used never the more diligence for them. And having crossed the sea of Pamphylia, she entered the Cydnus, and going up that river, landed at Tarfus. Never was equipage more splendid and magnificent than hers. The whole poop of her ship flamed with gold, the sails were purple, and the oars inlaid with silver. A pavilion of cloth of gold was raised upon the deck, under which appeared the queen, robed like Venus, and surrounded with the most beautiful virgins of her court, of whom some represented the nereids, and others the graces. Instead of trumpets, were heard flutes, hautboys, harps, and other such instruments of music, warbling the softest airs, to which the oars kept time, and rendered the harmony more agreeable. Perfumes burnt on the deck, which spread their odours to a great distance upon the river, and on each side of its banks, that were covered with an multitude of people, whom the novelty of the spectacle had drawn thither.
As soon as her arrival was known, the whole people of Tarfus went out to meet her; so that Anthony, who at that time was giving audience, saw his tribunal abandoned by all the world, and not a single person with him, but his lectors and domesticks. A rumour was spread, that it was the goddess Venus, who came in masquerade to make Bacchus a visit for the good of Asia.

She was no sooner landed, than Anthony sent to compliment and invite her to supper. But she answered his deputies, that she should be very glad to regale him herself, and that she would expect him in the tents she had caused to be got ready upon the banks of the river. He made no difficulty to go thither, and found the preparations of a magnificence not to be expressed. He admired particularly the beauty of the branches, which had been disposed with abundance of art, and were so luminous, that they made midnight seem agreeable.

Anthony invited her, in his turn, for the next day. But whatever endeavours he had used to exceed her in this entertainment, he confessed himself overcome, as well in the splendor as disposition of the feast, and was the first to rally the parsimony and plainness of his own, in comparison with the sumptuosity and elegance of Cleopatra's. The queen finding nothing but what was gross in the pleasantries of Anthony, and more expressive of the soldier than the courtier, repaid him in his own coin; but with so much wit and grace, that he was not in the least offended at it. For the beauties and charms of her conversation, attended with all possible sweetness and gaiety, had attractions in them still more irresistible than her form and features, and left such incentives in the heart, the very soul, as were not easily conceivable. She charmed whenever she but spoke, but musick and harmony were in her utterance, and the very sound of her voice.

Little or no mention was made of the complaints against Cleopatra, which were, besides, without foundation.
tion. She struck Anthony so violently with her charms, and gained so absolute an ascendant over him, that he could refuse her nothing. It was at this time he caused Arsinoe her sister to be put to death, who had taken refuge in the temple of Diana at Melitus, as in a secure asylum.

(m) Great feasts were made every day. Some new banquet still outdid that which preceded it, and she seemed to study to excel herself. Anthony, in a feast which she made, was astonished at seeing the riches displayed on all sides, and especially at the great number of gold cups enriched with jewels, and wrought by the most excellent workmen. She told him, with a disdainful air, that those were but trifles, and made him a present of them. The next day the banquet was still more superb. Anthony, according to custom, had brought a good number of guests along with him, all officers of rank and distinction. She gave them all the vessels and plate of gold and silver used at the entertainment.

Without doubt, in one of these feasts happened what Pliny, and after him Macrobius, relate. Cleopatra jested according to custom upon Anthony's table, as very indifferently served, and inelegant. Piqued with the raillery, he asked her with some warmth, what she thought would add to its magnificence? Cleopatra answered coldly, that she could expend* more than a million of livres upon one supper. He affirmed, that she only boasted, that it was impossible, and that she could never make it appear. A wager was laid, and Plancas was to decide it. The next day they came to the banquet. The service was magnificent, but had nothing so very extraordinary in it. Anthony calculated the expense, demanded of the queen the price of the several dishes, and with an air of raillery, as secure of victory, told her, that they were still far from a million.

Stay,

(m) Athen. l. iv. p. 147, 148.
* Centes H-S. Hoc eft centes centena millies sertertiwm. Which of livres, or 52500 l. sterling.
Stay, said the queen, this is only a beginning. I shall try whether I can't spend a million only upon myself. A second table was brought, and, according to the order she had before given, nothing was let on it but a single cup of vinegar. Anthony surprised at such a preparation, could not imagine for what it was intended. Cleopatra had at her ears two of the finest pearls that ever were seen, each of which was valued at about fifty thousand pounds. One of these pearls she took off, threw it into + the vinegar, and, after having made it melt, swallowed it. She was preparing to do as much by the other †; Plancus stopped her, and deciding the wager in her favour, declared Anthony overcame. Plancus was much in the wrong, to envy the queen the singular and peculiar glory of having devoured two millions in two cups.

Anthony was embroiled with Cæsar. Whilst his wife Fulvia was very active at Rome in supporting his interests, and the army of the Parthians was upon the point of entering Syria, as if those things did not concern him, he suffered himself to be drawn away by Cleopatra to Alexandria, where they passed their time in games, amusements, and voluptuousness, treating each other every day at excessive and incredible expences, which may be judged of from the following circumstance.

(o) A young Greek, who went to Alexandria to study physick, upon the great noise those feasts made, had the curiosity to assure himself with his own eyes about

(o) Plut. in Anton. p. 928.

* The ancients changed their tables to the disgrace of royalty, the son of a comedian (Clodius the son of Clodius) had done something of the same kind, and often swallowed pearls melted in that manner, from his meals enormous.

Filius Æfopidetraëtam ex aure Metelle, Scilicet ut decissolidiũsexforberet, aceto Diluit insignem baccam—

Hor. l. ii. Sat. 5

† This other pearl was afterwards consecrated to Venus by Augustus, who carried it to Rome on his return from Alexandria; and having caused it to be cut in two, its size was so extraordinary, that it served for pendants in the ears of that goddess.
about them. Having been admitted into Anthony's kitchen, he saw, amongst other things, eight wild boars roasting whole at the same time. Upon which he expressed surprize at the great number of guests that he supposed were to be at this supper. One of the officers could not forbear laughing, and told him, that they were not so many as he imagined, and that there could not be above ten in all: But that it was necessary every thing should be served in a degree of perfection, which every moment ceases, and spoils. "For," added he, "it often happens, that Anthony will order his supper, and a moment after forbid it to be served, having entered into some conversation that diverts him. For that reason not one but many suppers are provided, because it is hard to know at what time he will think fit to eat."

Cleopatra, left Anthony should escape her, never lost sight of him, nor quitted him day or night, but was always employed in diverting and retaining him in her chains. She played with him at dice, hunted with him, and when he exercised his troops was always present. Her sole attention was to amuse him agreeably, and not to leave him time to conceive the least disgust.

One day, when he was fishing with an angle, and caught nothing, he was very much displeased on that account, because the queen was of the party, and he was unwilling to seem to want address or good fortune in her presence. It therefore came into his thoughts to order fishermen to dive secretly under water, and to fasten some of their large fishes to his hook, which they had taken before. That order was executed immediately, and Anthony drew up his line several times, with a great fish at the end of it. This artifice did not escape the fair Egyptian. She affected great admiration and surprize at Anthony's good fortune; but told her friends privately what had passed, and invited them to come the next day, and be spectators of a like pleasantry. They did not fail. When they were all got into the fishing-boats, and and Anthony had thrown his line, he commanded one of her people to dive immediately into the water, to prevent Anthony's divers, and to make fast a large salt fish, of those that came from the kingdom of Pontus, to his hook. When Anthony perceived his line had its load, he drew it up. It is easy to imagine, what a great laugh arose at the sight of that salt fish; and Cleopatra said to him, Leave the line, good general, to us, the kings and queens of Pharos and Canopus: Your business is to fish for cities, kingdoms, and kings.

Whilst Anthony amused himself in these puerile sports and trifling diversions, the news he received of Labienus's conquests, at the head of the Parthian army, awakened him from his profound sleep, and obliged him to march against them. But having received advice, upon his route, of Fulvia's death, he returned to Rome, where he reconciled himself to young Cæsar, whose sister Octavia he married, a woman of extraordinary merit, who was lately become a widow by the death of Marcellus. It was believed this marriage would make him forget Cleopatra. But having began his march against the Parthians, his passion for the Egyptian, which had something of enchantment in it, re-kindled with more violence than ever.

\[ (p) \] This queen, in the midst of the most violent passions, and the intoxication of pleasures, retained always a taste for polite learning, and the sciences. In the place where stood the famous library of Alexandria, which had been burnt some years before, as we have observed, she erected a new one, to the augmentation of which Anthony very much contributed, by presenting her the libraries of Pergamus, in which were above two hundred thousand volumes. She did not collect books merely for ornament, she made use of them. There were few barbarous nations to whom she spoke by an interpreter; she answered most of them in their own language; the Ethiopians, the Egyptians, the

\[ (p) \] Epiphan. de mens. & pond.
OF EGYPT.

Troglydææ, Arabians, Syrians, Medes, Parthians.

She knew besides several other languages; whereas the kings, who had reigned before her in Egypt, had scarce been able to learn the Egyptian, and some of them had even forgot the Macedonian, their natural tongue.

Cleopatra, pretending herself the lawful wife of Anthony, saw him marry Octavia with great emotion, whom she looked upon as her rival. Anthony, to appease her, was obliged to make her magnificent presents. He gave her Phœnicia, the lower Syria, the isle of Cyprus, with a great extent of Cilicia. To these he added part of Judæa and Arabia. These great presents, which considerably abridged the empire, very much afflicted the Romans, and they were no less offended at the excessive honours which he paid this foreign princes.

Two years passed, during which Anthony made several voyages to Rome, and undertook some expeditions against the Parthians and Armenians, in which he acquired no great honour.

It was in one of these expeditions the temple of Anaitis was plundered, a goddess much celebrated amongst a certain people of Armenia. Her statue of mafly gold was broke in pieces by the soldiers, with which several of them were considerably enriched. One of them, a veteran, who afterwards settled at Bologna in Italy, had the good fortune to receive Augustus in his house, and to entertain him at supper.

Is it true, said that prince at table, talking of this story, that the man, who made the first stroke at the statue of this goddess, was immediately deprived of sight, lost the use of his limbs, and expired the same hour? If it were, replied the veteran with a smile, I should not now have the honour of seeing Augustus beneath my roof, being myself the rash person who made the first attack upon her, which has since stood me in great stead. For if I have any thing, I am entirely indebted for it to the

(q) Plut. in Anton. p. 927. (r) Plin. l. xxxiii.
the good goddefs; upon one of whose legs, even now, my lord, you are at supper.

(s) Anthony, believing he had made every thing secure in those countries, led back his troops. From his impatience to rejoin Cleopatra, he hastened his march so much, notwithstanding the rigour of the season and the continual snows, that he lost eight thousand men upon his route, and marched into Phoenicia with very few followers. He rested there in expectation of Cleopatra: And as she was slow in coming, he fell into anxiety, grief, and languishment, that visibly preyed upon him. She arrived at length with clothes, and great sums of money, for his troops.

Octavia, at the same time, had quitted Rome to join him, and was already arrived at Athens. Cleopatra rightly perceived that she came to dispute Anthony's heart with her. She was afraid, that with her virtue, wisdom, and gravity of manners, if she had time to make use of her modest, but lively and insinuating, attractions to win her husband, that she would gain an absolute power over him. To avoid which danger, she affected to die for love of Anthony; and, with that view, made herself lean and wan, by taking very little nourishment. Whenever he entered her apartment, she looked upon him with an air of surprize and amazement; and when he left her, seemed to languish with sorrow and dejection. She often contrived to appear bathed in tears, and at the same moment endeavoured to dry and conceal them, as to hide her weakness and disorder. Anthony, who feared nothing so much as occasioning the least displeasure to Cleopatra, wrote letters to Octavia, to order her to stay for him at Athens, and to come no farther, because he was upon the point of undertaking some new expedition. At the request of the king of the Medes, who promised him powerful succours, he was, in reality, making preparations to renew the war against the Parthians.

That

(s) Plut. in Anton. p. 239—242.
That virtuous Roman lady, dissembling the wrong he did her, sent to him to know, where it would be agreeable to him to have the presents carried, she had designed for him, since he did not think fit to let her deliver them in person. Anthony received this second compliment no better than the first; and Cleopatra, who had prevented his seeing Octavia, would not permit him to receive any thing from her. Octavia was obliged therefore to return to Rome, without having produced any other effect by her voyage, than that of making Anthony more inexcusable. This was what Cæsar desired, in order to have a jufter reason for breaking entirely with him.

When Octavia came to Rome, Cæsar, professing an high resentment of the affront she had received, ordered her to quit Anthony's house, and to go to her own. She answered, that she would not leave her husband's house; and that if he had no other reasons for a war with Anthony, than what related to her, she conjured him to renounce her interests. She accordingly always continued there, as if he had been absent, and educated with great care and magnificence, not only the children he had by her, but also those of Fulvia. What a contrast is here between Octavia and Cleopatra! In the midst of resentment and affronts, how worthy does the one seem of esteem and respect, and the other, with all her grandeur and magnificence, of contempt and abhorrence.

Cleopatra omitted no kind of arts to retain Anthony in her chains. Tears, caresses, reproaches, menaces, all were employed. By dint of presents she had gained all who approached him, and in whom he placed most confidence. Those flatterers represented to him, in the strongest terms, that it was utterly cruel and inhuman to abandon Cleopatra in the mournful condition she then was; and that it would be the death of that unfortunate princess, who loved, and lived for him alone. They softened and melted the heart of Anthony so effectually, that for fear of occasioning...
Cleopatra's death, he returned immediately to Alexandria, and put off the Medes to the following spring. It was with great difficulty then, that he resolved to leave Egypt, and remove himself from his dear Cleopatra. She agreed to attend him as far as the banks of the Euphrates.

After having made himself master of Armenia, as well by treachery as force of arms, he returned to Alexandria, which he entered in triumph, dragging at his chariot-wheels the king of Armenia, laden with chains of gold, and presented him in that condition to Cleopatra, who was pleased to see a captive king at her feet. He unbent his mind at leisure, after his great fatigues, in feasts and parties of pleasure, in which Cleopatra and himself passed night and day. That vain * Egyptian woman, at one of the banquets, seeing Anthony full of wine, presumed to ask him to give her the Roman empire, which he was not ashamed to promise her.

Before he set out on a new expedition, Anthony, to bind the queen to him by new obligations, and to give her new proofs of his being entirely devoted to her, resolved to solemnize the coronation of her and her children. A throne of mazy gold was erected for that purpose in the palace, the ascent to which was by several steps of silver. Anthony was seated upon his throne, drest in a purple robe embroidered with gold, and buttoned with diamonds. On his side he wore a scimetar, after the Persian mode, the handle and sheath of which were loaded with precious stones: He had a diadem on his brows, and a scepter of gold in his hand; in order, as he said, that in that equipage he might deserve to be the husband of a queen. Cleopatra sat on his right hand, in a shining robe, made of the precious linen appropriated to the use of the goddess Isis, whose name and habit she had the vanity to assume. Upon the same throne, but a little lower, sat Cæsario, the son of Julius Cæsar and Cleopatra, patra, and the two other children, Alexander and Ptolemy, whom she had by Anthony.

* Hæc mulier Agyptia ab ebrio Romanum imperium petiit: & imperatore, pretium Ubídinum, promísit Antonius. Flav. l. iv. c. 11.

Every one having taken the place assigned them, the heralds, by the command of Anthony, and in the presence of all the people, to whom the gates of the palace had been thrown open, proclaimed Cleopatra queen of Egypt, Cyprus, Libya, and Cœlosyria, in conjunction with her son Cæsario. They afterwards proclaimed the other princes kings of kings, and declared, till they should possess a more ample inheritance, Anthony gave Alexander, the eldest, the kingdoms of Armenia and Media, with that of Parthia, when he should have conquered it; and to the youngest, Ptolemy, the kingdoms of Syria, Phœnicia, and Cilicia. Those two young princes were drest after the mode of the several countries over which they were to reign. After the proclamation, the three princes rising from their seats, approached the throne, and putting one knee to the ground, kissed the hands of Anthony and Cleopatra. They had soon after a train assigned them, proportioned to their new dignity, and each his regiment of guards, drawn out of the principal families of his dominions.

Anthony repaired early into Armenia, in order to act against the Parthians, and advanced as far as the banks of the Araxis; but the news of what passed at Rome against him, prevented his going on, and induced him to abandon the Parthian expedition. He immediately detached Canidius with sixteen legions, to the coast of the Ionian sea, and joined them himself soon after at Ephesus, to be ready to act, in case of an open rupture between Cæsar and him; which there was great reason to expect.

Cleopatra was of the party; and that occasioned Anthony’s ruin. His friends advised him to send her back to Alexandria, till the event of the war should be known. But that queen apprehending, that by Octavia’s mediation he might come to an accommodation with Cæsar, gained Canidius, by presents of money, to speak in her favour to Anthony, and to represent to him, that it was neither just to remove a prince from this war, who contributed so much towards it on her side; nor useful to himself, because her departure would discourage the Egyptians, of whom the greatest part of his maritime forces consisted. Besides, continued those who talked in this manner, it did not appear, that Cleopatra was inferior, either in prudence or capacity, to any of the princes or kings in his army: She, who had governed so great a kingdom so long, might have learnt, in her commerce with Anthony, how to conduct the most important and difficult affairs with wisdom and address. Anthony did not oppose these remonstrances, which flattered at once his passion and vanity.

From Ephesus he repaired with Cleopatra to Samos, where the greatest part of their troops had their rendezvous, and where they passed their time in feasting and pleasure. The kings, in their train, exhausted themselves in making their court by extraordinary expenses, and displayed excessive luxury in their entertainments.

(u) It was probably in one of these feasts the circumstance happened, related by Pliny. Whatever passion Cleopatra professed for Anthony, as he perfectly knew her character for dissimulation, and that she was capable of the blackest crimes, he apprehended, I know not upon what foundation, that she might have thoughts of poisoning him, for which reason he never touched any dish at their banquet, till it had been tasted. It was impossible that the queen should not perceive so manifest a distrust. She employed a very extraordinary method to make him sensible how ill-founded his fears were; and also, that if she had so bad an intention, all the precautions he took would be ineffectual. She caused the extremities of the flowers to be poisoned, of which the wreaths, worn by Anthony and herself at table, according to the custom of the ancients, were composed. When their heads began to grow warm with wine, in the height of their gaiety, Cleopatra proposed drinking off those flowers to Anthony. He made no difficulty of it; and after having plucked off the end of his wreath with his fingers, and thrown them into his cup filled with wine, he was upon the point of drinking it, when the queen, taking hold of his arm, said to him—"I am the poisoner, against whom you take such mighty precaution. If it were possible for me to live without you, judge now whether I wanted either the opportunity, or reason for such an action." Having ordered a prisoner, condemned to die, to be brought thither, she made him drink that liquor, upon which he died immediately.

(u) Plin. l. xxi. c. 3.
OF EGYPT.

The court went from Samos to Athens, where they passed many days in the same excesses. Cleopatra spared no pains to obtain the same marks of affection and esteem, Octavia had received, during her residence in that city. But whatever she could do, she could extort from them only forced civilities, that terminated in a trifling deputation, which Anthony obliged the citizens to send to her, and of which he himself would be the chief, in quality of a citizen of Athens.

(x) The new consuls, Caius Sofius, and Domitius Aenobarbus, having declared openly for Anthony, quitted Rome, and repaired to him. Caeser, instead of seizing them, or causing them to be pursued, ordered it to be given out, that they went to him by his permission; and declared publickly, that all persons, who were so disposed, had his consent to retire whither they thought fit. By that means he remained master at Rome, and was in a condition to decree, and act whatever he thought proper for his own interests, or contrary to those of Anthony.

When Anthony was apprized of this, he assembled all the heads of his party; and the result of their deliberations was, that he should declare war against Cæsar, and repudiate Octavia. He did both. Anthony's preparations for the war were so far advanced, that if he had attacked Cæsar vigorously without loss of

A. M. 3972
Ant. J. C. 32

(x) Plut. in Anton. p. 942---955.
of time, the advantage must inevitably have been wholly on his side: For his adversary was not then in a condition to make head against him, either by sea or land. But voluptuousness carried it, and the operations were put off to the next year. This was his ruin. Cæsar, by his delay, had time to assemble all his forces.

The deputies sent by Anthony to Rome, to declare his divorce from Octavia, had orders to command her to quit his house, with all her children, and, in case of refusal, to turn her out by force, and to leave nobody in it but the son of Anthony by Fulvia. An indignity the more sensible to Octavia, as a rival was the cause of it. However, stifling her resentment, she answered the deputies only with her tears; and as unjust as his orders were, she obeyed them, and removed with her children. She even laboured to appease the people, whom so unworthy an action had incensed against him, and did her utmost to mollify the rage of Cæsar. She represented to them, that it was inconsistent with the wisdom and dignity of the Roman people, to enter into such petty differences; that it was only a quarrel between women, which did not merit their resentment about it; and that she should be very wretched, if she were the occasion of a new war; she, who had solely consented to her marriage with Anthony, from the hope, that it would prove the pledge of an union between him and Cæsar. Her remonstrances had a different effect from her intentions, and the people, charmed with her virtue, had still more compassion for her misfortune, and detestation for Anthony than before.

But nothing enraged them to such an height as Anthony's will, which he had deposited in the hands of the Vestal virgins. This mystery was revealed by (a) two persons of consular dignity, who, incapable of suffering the pride of Cleopatra, and the abandoned voluptuousness of Anthony, had retired to Cæsar. As they had been witnesses of this will, and knew the secret, secret, they declared it to Cæsar. The Vestals made great difficulty to give up an act confided to their care; alledging in their excuse the faith of deposits, which they were obliged to observe; and were determined to be forced to it by the authority of the people. The will accordingly being brought into the Forum, these three articles were read in it: I. That Anthony acknowledged Cæsario the lawful son of Julius Cæsar. II. That he appointed his sons by Cleopatra to be his heirs, with the title of kings of kings. III. That he decreed, in case he should die at Rome, that his body, after having been carried in pomp through the city, should be laid the same evening on a bed of state, in order to its being sent to Cleopatra, to whom he left the care of his funeral interment.

(a) Titius and Plancus.

There are some authors, however, who believe this will to be a piece contrived by Cæsar, to render Anthony more odious to the people. And indeed, what appearance was there, that Anthony, who well knew to what a degree the Roman people were jealous of their rights and customs, should confide to them the execution of a testament, which violated them with so much contempt?

When Cæsar had an army and fleet ready, which seemed strong enough to make head against his enemy, he also declared war on his side. But in the decree granted by the people to that purpose, he caused it to be expressed, that it was against Cleopatra: It was from a refinement of policy he acted in that manner, and did not insert Anthony’s name in the declaration of war, though actually intended against him. For, besides throwing the blame upon Anthony, by making him the aggressor in a war against his country, he artfully managed those who were still attached to him, whose number and credit might have proved formidable, and whom he would have been under the necessity of declaring enemies to the commonwealth, if Anthony had been expressly named in the decree.
Anthony returned from Athens to Samos, where the whole fleet was assembled. It consisted of five hundred ships of war of extraordinary size and structure, having several decks one above another, with towers upon the head and stern of a prodigious height; so that those superb vessels upon the sea, might have been taken for floating islands. Such great crews were necessary for completely manning those heavy machines, that Anthony, not being able to find mariners enough, had been obliged to take husbandmen, artificers, muleteers, and all sorts of people void of experience, and fitter to give trouble, than do service.

On board this fleet were two hundred thousand foot, and twelve thousand horse. The kings of Libya, Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, Comagena, and Thrace, were there in person; and those of Pontus, Judæa, Lycaonia, Galatia, and Media, had sent their troops. A more splendid and pompous sight could not be seen, than this fleet when it put to sea, and had unfurled its sails. But nothing equalled the magnificence of Cleopatra's galley, all flaming with gold; its sails of purple; its flags and streamers floating in the wind, whilst trumpets, and other instruments of war, made the heavens resound with airs of joy and triumph. Anthony followed her close in a galley almost as splendid. That * queen, drunk with her fortune and grandeur, and hearkening only to her unbridled ambition, foolishly threatened the Capitol with approaching ruin, and prepared, with her infamous troop

* ————Dum Capitolio
Regina dementes ruinas,
Funus & imperio parabat,
Contaminato cum grege turpium
Morbo virorum; quidlibet impotens
Sperare, fortunaque dulci
Ebraia.——————————

Whilst drunk with fortune's heady wine,
Fell'd with vast hope, though impotent in arms,
The haughty queen conceives the wild design,
So much her vain ambition charms;
With her polluted band of supple slaves,
Her fílken eunuchs, and her Phærian knaves,
The Capitol in dust to level low,
And give Rome's empire, and the world, a last and fatal blow!
troop of eunuchs, utterly to subvert the Roman empire.

On the other side, less pomp and splendor was seen, but more utility. Cæsar had only two hundred and fifty ships, and fourscore thousand foot, with as many horse as Anthony. But all his troops were chosen men, and on board his fleet were none but experienced seamen. His vessels were not so large as Anthony’s, but they were much lighter, and fitter for service.

Cæsar’s rendezvous was at Brundusium, and Anthony advanced to Corecyra. But the season of the year was over, and bad weather came on; so that they were both obliged to retire, and to put their troops into winter-quarters, and their fleets into good ports, till spring came on.

Anthony and Cæsar, as soon as the season would admit, took the field both by sea and land. The two fleets entered the Ambracian gulph in Epirus. Anthony’s bravest and most experienced officers advised him not to hazard a battle by sea, to send back Cleopatra into Egypt, and to make all possible haste into Thrace or Macedonia, in order to fight there by land; because his army, composed of good troops, and much superior in numbers to Cæsar’s, seemed to promise him the victory; whereas a fleet so ill manned as his, how numerous soever it might be, was by no means to be relied on. But it was long since Anthony had not been susceptible of good advice, and had acted only to please Cleopatra. That proud princess, who judged things solely from appearances, believed her fleet invincible, and that Cæsar’s ships could not approach it without being dashed to pieces. Besides, she perceived aright, that in case of misfortune, it would be easier for her to escape in her ships, than by land. Her opinion therefore took place against the advice of all the generals.

* The battle was fought upon the second of September, at the mouth of the gulph of Ambracia, near the city of Actium, in sight of both the land-armies; armies; the one of which was drawn up in battle upon the north, and the other upon the south of that streight, expecting the event. It was doubtful for some time, and seemed as much in favour of Anthony as Cæsar, till the retreat of Cleopatra. That queen, frightened with the noise of the battle, in which every thing was terrible to a woman, took to flight, when she was in no danger, and drew after her the whole Egyptian squadron, that consisted of sixty ships of the line; with which she failed for the coast of Peloponnesus. Anthony, who saw her fly, forgetting every thing, forgetting even himself, followed her precipitately, and yielded a victory to Cæsar, which till then he had exceedingly well disputed. It, however, cost the victor extremely dear. For Anthony's ships fought so well after his departure, that though the battle began before noon, it was not over when night came on; so that Cæsar's troops were obliged to pass it on board their ships.

* The 4th before the nones of September.

The next day, Cæsar seeing his victory complete, detached a squadron in pursuit of Anthony and Cleopatra. But that squadron despairing of ever coming up with them, because so far before it, soon returned to join the gros of the fleet. Anthony having entered the admiral-galley, in which Cleopatra was, went and sat down at the head of it; where, leaning his elbows on his knees, and supporting his head with his two hands, he remained like a man overwhelmed with shame and rage; reflecting, with profound melancholy, upon his ill conduct, and the misfortunes she had brought upon him. He kept in that posture, and in those thoughts, during the three days they were going to * Taenarum, without seeing or speaking to Cleopatra. At the end of that time, they saw each other again, and lived together as usual.

The land-army still remained entire, and consisted of eighteen legions, and two-and-twenty thousand horse, under the command of Canidius, Anthony's lieutenant-general, and might have made head, and given given Cæsar abundance of difficulty. But seeing themselves abandoned by their generals, they surrendered to Cæsar, who received them with open arms.

* Promontory of Laconia.

From Tænarus Cleopatra took the route of Alexandria, and Anthony that of Libya, where he had left a considerable army to guard the frontiers of that country. Upon his landing he was informed, that Scarpus, who commanded this army, had declared for Cæsar. He was so struck with this news, which he had no room to expect, that he would have killed himself, and was with difficulty prevented from it by his friends. He therefore had no other choice to make, than to follow Cleopatra to Alexandria, where she was arrived.

When she approached that port, she was afraid, if her misfortune should be known, that she should be refused entrance. She therefore caused her ships to be crowned, as if she was returned victorious; and no sooner landed, than she caused all the great lords of her kingdom, whom she suspected, to be put to death, lest they should excite seditions against her, when they were informed of her defeat. Anthony found her in the midst of these bloody executions.

Soon after she formed another very extraordinary design. To avoid falling into Cæsar's hands, who, she foresaw, would follow her into Egypt, she designed to have her ships in the Mediterranean carried into the Red-sea, over the isthmus between them, which is no more than thirty leagues broad; and afterwards to put all her treasures on board those ships, and others which she had in that sea. But the Arabs, who inhabited the coast, having burnt all the ships she had there, she was obliged to abandon her design.

Changing therefore her resolution, she thought only of gaining Cæsar, whom she looked upon as her conqueror, and to make him a sacrifice of Anthony, whose misfortunes had rendered him indifferent to her. Such was this princess's disposition. Though she loved even even to madness, she had still more ambition than love; and the crown being dearer to her than her husband, she entertained thoughts of preserving it at the price of Anthony's life. But concealing her sentiments from him, she persuaded him to send ambassadors to Cæsar, to negotiate a treaty of peace with him. She joined her ambassadors with his; but gave them instructions to treat separately for herself. Cæsar would not so much as see Anthony's ambassadors. He dismissed Cleopatra's with a favourable answer. He passionately desired to make sure of her person and treasures; her person, to adorn his triumph; her treasures, to enable him to discharge the debts he had contracted upon account of this war. He therefore gave her reason to conceive great hopes, in case she would sacrifice Anthony to him.

The latter, after his return from Libya, had retired into a country-house, which he had caused to be built expressly on the banks of the Nile, in order to enjoy the conversation of two of his friends, who had followed him thither. In his retirement it might have been expected, that he would hear with pleasure the wise discourses of those two philosophers. But as they could not banish from his heart his love for Cleopatra, the sole cause of all his misfortunes, that passion, which they had only suspended, soon resumed its former empire. He returned to Alexandria, abandoned himself again to the charms and carelessness of Cleopatra, and, with design to please her, sent deputies again to Cæsar, to demand life of him, upon the shameful conditions of passing it at Athens as a private person; provided Cæsar would assure Egypt to Cleopatra and her children.

This second deputation, not having met with a more favourable reception than the former, Anthony endeavoured to extinguish in himself the sense of his present misfortunes, and the apprehension of those that threatened him, by abandoning himself immoderately to feasting and voluptuousness. Cleopatra and he regaled one another alternately, and strove with emulation emulation to exceed each other in the incredible magnificence of their banquets.

The queen, however, who foresaw what might happen, collected all sorts of poisons, and to try which of them occasioned death with the least pain, she made the experiment of their virtues and strength upon criminals in the prisons condemned to die. Having observed that the strongest poisons caused death the soonest, but with great torment; and that those which were gentle, brought on an easy, but slow death; she tried the biting of venomous creatures, and caused various kinds of serpents to be applied to different persons. She made these experiments every day, and discovered, at length, that the aspick was the only one that caused neither torture nor convulsions; and which, throwing the persons bit into an immediate heaviness and stupefaction, attended with a slight sweating upon the face, and a numbness of all the organs of sense, gently extinguished life; so that those in that condition were angry when any one awakened them, or endeavoured to make them rise, like people exceedingly sleepy. This was the poison she fixed upon.

To dispel Anthony's suspicions and subjects of complaint, she applied herself with more than ordinary solicitude in caring for him. Though she celebrated her own birth-day with little solemnity, and suitably to her present condition, she kept that of Anthony with a splendor and magnificence, above what she had ever instanced before; so that many of the guests who came poor to that feast, went rich from it.

Cæsar, knowing how important it was to him not to leave his victory imperfect, marched in the beginning of the spring into Syria, and from thence sat down before Pelusium. He sent to summon the governor to open the gates to him; and Seleucus, who commanded there for Cleopatra, having received secret orders upon that head, surrendered the place without waiting a siege. The rumour of this treason spread in the city. Cleopatra, to clear herself of the accu-accusation, put the wife and children of Seleucus into Anthony's hands, in order that he might revenge his treachery, by putting them to death. What a monster was this princess! The most odious of vices were united in her person; professed immodesty, breach of faith, injustice, cruelty, and, what crowns all the rest, the false outside of a deceitful amity, which covers a design formed to deliver up to his enemy the person the loads with the most tender caresles, and with marks of the warmest and most sincere attachment. Such are the effects of ambition, which was her predominant vice.

Adjoining to the temple of Isis, she had caused tombs and halls to be erected, superb as well for their beauty and magnificence, as their loftiness and extent. Thither she ordered her most precious moveables to be carried; gold, silver, jewels, ebony, ivory, and a large quantity of perfumes and aromatick wood; as if she intended to raise a funeral-pile, upon which she would consume herself with her treasures. Caesar, alarmed for the latter, and apprehending, left her despair should induce her to burn them, dispatched every day some person to her, to give her great hopes of the most kind and generous treatment, and nevertheless advanced towards the city by great marches.

Upon arriving there, he encamped near the Hippodrome. He was in hopes of making himself master of the city soon, by means of the intelligence he held with Cleopatra, upon which he relied no less than upon his army.

Anthony was ignorant of that princess's intrigues, and being unwilling to believe what was told him of them, he prepared for a good defence. He made a vigorous sally, and after having severely handled the besiegers, and warmly pursued to the gates of their camp a detachment of horse, which had been sent against him, he returned victorious into the city. This was the last effort of his expiring valour; for after this exploit, his fortitude and sense of glory abandoned him, or were never after of any service to him.
OF EGYPT.

him. Instead of making use of this advantage, and of applying himself seriously to his defence, by observing the motions of Cleopatra, who betrayed him; he came, completely armed as he was, to throw himself at her feet, and to kiss her hands. The whole palace of Alexandria immediately refounded with acclamations, as if the siege had been raised; and Cleopatra, who had no thoughts but of amusing Anthony, ordered a magnificent feast to be prepared, at which they passed the rest of the day, and part of the night, together.

Early on the morrow, Anthony resolved to attack Cæsar by sea and land. He drew up his land-army upon some eminences in the city, and from thence kept his galleys in view, which were going out of the port, in order to charge those of Cæsar. He waited, without making any motion, to see the success of that attack; but was much astonished, when he saw Cleopatra’s admiral strike his flag, when he came in view of Cæsar’s, and surrender his whole fleet to him.

This treason opened Anthony’s eyes, and made him give credit to what his friends had told him, of the queen’s perfidy. In this extremity he was for signa-lizing himself by an extraordinary act of valour, capable, in his sense, of doing him abundance of honour. He sent to challenge Cæsar to a single combat. Cæsar made answer, that if Anthony was weary of life, there were other ways to die besides that. Anthony, seeing himself ridiculed by Cæsar, and betrayed by Cleopatra, returned into the city, and was a moment after abandoned by all his cavalry. Seized with rage and despair, he then flew to the palace, with design to avenge himself upon Cleopatra, but did not find her there.

That artificial prince who had foreseen what happened, to escape the rage of Anthony, had retired into the quarter where stood the tombs of the kings of Egypt, which was fortified with good walls, and of which she ordered the gates to be closed. She caused Anthony to be told, that preferring an honourable death to a shameful captivity, she had killed herself in the midst of her ancestors tombs, where she had also chose her own sepulchre. Anthony, too credulous, did not give himself time to examine a piece of news, which he ought to have suspected, after all Cleopatra's other infidelities; and struck with the idea of her death, passed immediately from excess of rage to the most violent transports of grief, and thought only of following her into the grave.

Having taken this furious resolution, he shut himself up in his apartment with a slave, and having caused his armour to be taken off, he commanded him to plunge his dagger into his breast. But that slave, full of affection, respect, and fidelity for his master, stabbed himself with it, and fell dead at his feet. Anthony, looking upon this action as an example for him to follow, thrust his sword into his body, and fell upon the floor in a torrent of his blood, which he mingled with that of his slave. At that moment an officer of the queen's guards came to let him know, that she was alive. He no sooner heard the name of Cleopatra pronounced, than he opened his dying eyes, and being informed that she was not dead, he suffered his wound to be dressed, and afterwards caused himself to be carried to the fort where she had caused herself to be shut up. Cleopatra would not permit the gates to be opened to give him entrance, for fear of some surprize; but she appeared at an high window, from whence she threw down chains and cords. Anthony was made fast to these, and Cleopatra, assisted by two women, who were the only persons she had brought with her into the tomb, drew him up. Never was there a more moving sight. Anthony, all bathed in his blood, with death painted in his face, was dragged up in the air, turning his dying eyes, and extending his feeble hands, towards Cleopatra, as if to conjure her to receive his last breath; whilst she, with her features distorted, and her arms strained, pulled the cords with her whole strength; the people below, who who could give her no farther aid, encouraging her with their cries.

When she had drawn him up to her, and had laid him on a bed, she tore her clothes upon him, and beating her breast, and wiping the blood from his wound, with her face close to his, she called him her prince, her lord, her dearest spouse. Whilst she made these mournful exclamations, she cut off Anthony's hair, according to the superstition of the Pagans, who believed that a relief to those who died a violent death.

Anthony, recovering his senses, and seeing Cleopatra's affliction, said to her, to comfort her, that he thought himself happy as he died in her arms; and, that as to his defeat, he was not ashamed of it, it being no disgrace for a Roman to be overcome by Romans. He afterwards advised her to save her life and kingdom, provided she could do so with honour, to be upon her guard against the traitors of her own court, as well as the Romans in Cæsar's train, and to trust only Proculeius. He expired with these words.

The same moment Proculeius arrived from Cæsar, who could not refrain from tears at the sad relation of what had passed, and at the sight of the sword still reeking with Anthony's blood, which was presented to him. He had particular orders to get Cleopatra into his hands, and to take her alive, if possible. That princess refused to surrender herself to him. She had however a conversation with him, without letting him enter the tomb. He only came close to the gates, which were well fastened, but gave passage for the voice through cracks. They talked a considerable time together, during which she continually asked the kingdom for her children; whilst he exhorted her to hope the best, and pressed her to confide all her interests to Cæsar.

After having considered the place well, he went to make his report to Cæsar, who immediately sent Gallus to talk again with her. Gallus went to the gates, as Proculeius had done, and spoke like him.
through the crevices, protracting the conversation on purpose. In the mean while Proculeius brought a ladder to the wall, entered the tomb by the same window through which she and her woman had drawn up Anthony, and, followed by two officers who were with him, went down to the gate where she was speaking to Gallus. One of the two women, who were shut up with her, seeing him come, cried out, quite out of her senses with fear and surprize, Oh unfortunate Cleopatra, you are taken! Cleopatra turned her head, saw Proculeius, and would have stabbed herself with a dagger, which she always carried at her girdle. But Proculeius ran nimbly to her, took her in his arms, and said to her, You wrong yourself and Caesar too, in depriving him of so grateful an occasion of shewing his goodness and clemency. At the same time he forced the dagger out of her hands, and shook her robes, lest she should have concealed poison in them.

Caesar sent one of his freemen, named Epaphroditus, with orders to guard her carefully, to prevent her making any attempt upon herself, and to behave to her, at the same time, with all the regard and complacency she could desire: He likewise instructed Proculeius to ask the queen what she desired of him.

Caesar afterwards prepared to enter Alexandria, the conquest of which there were no longer any to dispute with him. He found the gates of it open, and all the inhabitants in extreme consternation, not knowing what they had to hope or fear. He entered the city, conversing with the philosopher Ariæus, upon whom he leant with an air of familiarity, to signify publicly the regard he had for him. Being arrived at the palace, he ascended a tribunal, which he ordered to be erected there; and seeing the whole people prostrate upon the ground, he commanded them to rise. He then told them, that he pardoned them for three reasons: The first, upon the account of Alexander their founder; the second, for the beauty of their city; and the third, for the sake of Ariæus one of their citizens, whose merit and knowledge he esteemed.
Augustus & Cleopatra.
Proculeius, in the mean time, acquitted himself of his commission to the queen, who at first asked nothing of Cæsar, but his permission to bury Anthony, which was granted her without difficulty. She spared no cost to render his interment magnificent, according to the custom of Egypt. She caused his body to be embalmed with the most exquisite perfumes of the East, and placed it amongst the tombs of the kings of Egypt.

Cæsar did not think proper to see Cleopatra in the first days of her mourning: But when he believed he might do it with decency, he was introduced into her chamber, after having asked her permission; being desirous to conceal his designs under the regard he professed for her. She was laid upon a little bed, in a very simple and neglected manner. When he entered her chamber, though she had nothing on but a single tunic, she rose immediately, and went to throw herself at his feet, horribly disfigured, her hair loose and disordered, her visage wild and haggard, her voice faultering, her eyes almost dissolved by excessive weeping, and her bosom covered with wounds and bruises. That natural grace and lofty mien, which derived from her beauty, were, however, not wholly extinct; and notwithstanding the deplorable condition to which she was reduced, even through that depth of grief and dejection, as from a dark cloud, shot forth pointed graces, and a kind of radiance, which brightened in her looks, and in every moment of her countenance. Though she was almost dying, she did not despair of inspiring that young victor with love, as she had formerly done Cæsar and Anthony.

The chamber where she received him was full of the portraits of Julius Cæsar. "My lord," said she to him, pointing to those pictures, "behold those images of him who adopted you his successor in "the Roman empire, and to whom I was obliged for "my crown." Then taking letters out of her bosom, which she had concealed in it; "see also," said she, kissing them, "the dear testimonies of his love."
She afterwards read some of the most tender of them, commenting upon them, at proper intervals, with moving exclamations, and passionate glances; but she employed those arts with no success, for whether her charms had no longer the power they had in her youth, or that ambition was Cæsar's ruling passion, he did not seem affected with either her person or conversation; contenting himself with exhorting her to take courage, and with assuring her of his good intentions. She was far from not discerning that coldness, from which she conceived no good augury; but dissembling her concern, and changing the discourse, she thanked him for the compliments Proculeius had made her in his name, and he had thought fit to repeat in person. She added, that in revenge she would deliver to him all the treasures of the kings of Egypt. And in effect, she put an inventory into his hands of all her moveables, jewels, and revenues. And as Seleucus, one of her treasurers, who was present, reproached her with not declaring the whole, and with having concealed part of her most valuable effects; incensed at so great an insult, she rose up, ran to him, and gave him several blows in the face. Then turning towards Cæsar, "Is it not a horrible thing," said she to him, "that when you have not disdain'd to visit me, and have thought fit to console me in the sad condition I now am, my own domesticks should accuse me before you of retaining some woman's jewels, not to adorn a miserable person as I am, but for a present to your sister Octavia, and your wife Livia; that their protection may induce you to afford a more favourable treatment to an unfortunate princess?"

Cæsar was exceedingly pleased to hear her talk in that manner, not doubting but the love of life inspired her with such language. He told her, she might dispose as she pleased of the jewels she had reserved: And after having assured her, that he would treat her with more generosity and magnificence than she could imagine, imagine, he withdrew, imagining that he had deceived her, and was deceived himself.

Not doubting but Cæsar intended to make her serve as an ornament to his triumph, she had no other thoughts than to avoid that shame by dying. She well knew, that she was observed by the guards who had been assigned her, and under colour of doing her honour, followed her everywhere; and besides, that her time was short, Cæsar's departure approaching. The better therefore to amuse him, she sent to desire, that she might go to pay her last duty at the tomb of Anthony, and take her leave of him. Cæsar having granted her that permission, she went thither accordingly to bathe that tomb with her tears, and to assure Anthony, to whom she addressed her discourse as if he had been present before her eyes, that she would soon give him a more certain proof of her affection.

After that fatal protestation, which she accompanied with sighs and laments, she caused the tomb to be covered with flowers, and returned to her chamber. She then went into a bath, and from the bath to table, having ordered it to be served magnificently. When she rose from table, she wrote a letter to Cæsar; and having made all quit her chamber except her two women, she shut the door, sat down upon a bed, and asked for a basket of figs, which a peasant had lately brought. She placed it by her, and a moment after lay down as if she had fallen asleep. But that was the effect of the aspick, which was concealed among the fruit, and had stung her in the arm, which she had held to it. The poison immediately communicated itself to the heart, and killed her without pain, or being perceived by any body. The guards had orders to let nothing pass without a strict search into it; but the disguised peasant, who was one of the queen's faithful servants, played his part so well, and there appeared so little appearance of design in a basket of figs, that the guards suffered him to enter. Thus all Cæsar's precautions were ineffectual.
He did not doubt Cleopatra's resolution, after having read the letter she had wrote to him, to desire that he would suffer her body to be laid in the same tomb with that of Anthony, and instantly dispatched two officers to prevent it. But notwithstanding all the haste they could make, they found her dead.

That * princess was too haughty, and too much above the vulgar, to suffer herself to be led in triumph at the wheels of the victor's chariot. Determined to die, and thence become capable of the fiercest resolutions, she saw with dry eyes, and indifference, the mortal venom of the aspick glide into her veins.

She died at thirty-nine years of age, of which she had reigned twenty-two from the death of her father. The statues of Anthony were thrown down, and those of Cleopatra remained as they were; Archibius, who had long been in her service, having given Cæsar a thousand talents, that they might not be treated as Anthony's had been.

After Cleopatra's death, Egypt was reduced into a province of the Roman empire, and governed by a praefect sent thither from Rome. The reign of the Ptolemies in Egypt, to date its commencement from the death of Alexander the Great, had continued two hundred fourscore and thirteen years, from the year of the world 3681, to 3974.

* Aula & jacentem visere regiam Vultu sereno sortis, & asperas
'Tractare serpentes, ut atrum
Corporis combiberet venenum;
Deliberata morte ferocior;
Savis Liburnis felicet invidens
Privata deduci superbo
Non humilis mulier triumpho.

Hor. Od. xxxvii. l. 16

Not the dark palace of the realms below
Can awe the furious purpose of her soul;
Calmly she looks from her superior awe,
That can both death and fear controul;
Provokes the serpent's sting, his rage disclaims;
And joys to feel his poison in her veins.
Invidious to the victor's fancy'd pride,
She will not from her own descend,
Disgrac'd, a vulgar captive, by his side;
His pompous triumph to attend;
But fiercely flies to death, and bids her sorrows end,
CONCLUSION
OF THE ANCIENT HISTORY.

We have seen hitherto, without speaking of the first and ancient kingdom of Egypt, and of some states separate, and in a manner entirely distinct from the rest, three great successive empires, founded on the ruins of each other, subsist during a long series of ages, and at length entirely disappear; the empire of the Babylonians, the empire of the Medes and Persians, and the empire of the Macedonians and the Grecian princes, successors of Alexander the Great. A fourth empire arises, that of the Romans, which having already swallowed up most of those which have preceded it, will extend its conquests, and after having subjected all to its power by force of arms, be itself torn in a manner into different pieces, and by being so dismembered, make way for the establishment of almost all the kingdoms, which now divide Europe, Asia, and Africa. Behold here, to speak properly, an abridged picture of all ages; of the glory and power of all the empires of the world; in a word, of all that human greatness has of most splendid, and most capable of exciting admiration! All these, by an happy concurrence, generally unite in it: Height of genius, delicacy of taste, attended with solid judgment; the excellent taste of eloquence, carried to the highest degree of perfection, without departing from the natural and the true; the glory of arms, with that of arts and sciences; valour in conquering, and ability in government. What a multitude of great men of every kind does it not present to your view! What powerful, what glorious kings!
CONCLUSION OF THE

What great captains! What famous conquerors! What wise magistrates! What learned philosophers! What admirable legislators! We are transported with beholding in certain ages and countries, as if peculiar to themselves, an ardent zeal for justice, a passionate love for their country, a noble disinterestedness, a generous contempt of riches, and an esteem for poverty, which astonish and amaze us, so much they appear above human nature.

In this manner we think and judge. But whilst we are in admiration and extasy at the view of so many shining virtues, the Supreme Judge, who can alone estimate all things, sees nothing in them but trifle, meannesses, vanity, and pride; and, whilst mankind are continually busied in perpetuating the power of their families, in founding kingdoms, and eternizing themselves, if that were possible, God, from his throne on high, overthrows all their projects, and makes even their ambition the means of executing his purposes, infinitely superior to our understandings. He alone knows his operations and designs. All ages are present to him: He seeth from everlasting to everlasting (a). He has assigned all empires their fate and duration. In all the different revolutions, we have seen that nothing has come to pass by chance. We know, that under the image of that statue, which Nebuchadnezzar saw, of an enormous height and terrible aspect, with the head of gold, the breast and arms of silver, the belly and thighs of brass, and the legs of iron mixed with clay, God thought fit to represent the four great empires, uniting in them, as we have seen in the course of this history, all that is glorious, grand, formidable, and powerful. And of what has the Almighty occasion for overthrowing this immense colossus? (b) A small stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer summer threshing-floors, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

(a) Eccles. xxxix. 19. (b) Dan. ii. 34, 35.

We see with our own eyes the accomplishment of this admirable prophecy of Daniel, at least in part. Jesus Christ, who descended to clothe himself with flesh and blood in the sacred womb of the blessed virgin, without the participation of man, is the small stone that came from the mountain without human aid. The prevailing characteristics of his person, of his relations, his appearance, his manner of teaching, his disciples, in a word, of every thing that relates to him, were simplicity, poverty, and humility; which were so extreme, that they concealed from the eyes of the proud Jews the divine lustre of his miracles, how shining ever it was, and from the fight of the devil himself, as penetrating and attentive as he was, the evident proofs of his divinity.

Notwithstanding that seeming weakness, and even meannness, Jesus Christ will certainly conquer the whole universe. It is under this idea a prophet represents him to us; (c) He went forth conquering and to conquer. His work and mission are, to set up a kingdom for his Father, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom which shall not be left to other people, like thoes of which we have seen in the history; but it shall break in pieces, and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever.

The power granted to Jesus Christ, the founder of this empire, is without bounds, measure, or end. The kings, who glory so much in their puissance, have nothing which approaches in the least to that of Jesus Christ. They do not reign over the will of man, which is real dominion. Their subjects can think as they please independently of them. There are an infinitude of particular actions done without their order, and which escape their knowledge, as well as their power. Their designs often miscarry and and come to nothing, even during their own lives. But with Jesus Christ it is quite otherwise. (d) All power is given unto him in heaven and in earth. He exercises it principally upon the hearts and minds of men. Nothing is done without his order or permission. Every thing is disposed by his wisdom and power. Every thing co-operates, directly or indirectly, to the accomplishment of his designs.

(c) Apoc. vi. 2.

Whilst all things are in motion and fluctuate upon earth; whilst states and empires pass away with incredible rapidity, and human race, mainly employed in the external view of these things, are also drawn in by the same torrent, almost without perceiving it; there passes in secret an order and disposition of things unknown and invisible, which however determine our fate to all eternity. The duration of ages has no other end, than the formation of the bodies of the elect, which augments and tends daily towards perfection. When it shall receive its final accomplishment by the death of the last of the elect, (e) Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power. God grant that we may have all our share in that blessed kingdom, whose law is truth, whose king is love, and whose duration is eternity. Fiat, Fiat.

(d) Matth. xxviii. 18. (e) i Cor. xv. 24.
THE CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

ADVERTISEMENT.

CHRONOLOGY is the knowledge of times. It shews to what year the events related in history are to be referred. The years used for measuring the duration of time are either solar or lunar.

The Solar Year is that space between one equinox and another of the same denomination the next year: For instance, from the vernal equinox to the vernal equinox following, which contains 365 days five hours and forty-nine minutes.

The Lunar Year is composed of twelve lunar months, of which each is twenty-nine days twelve hours and forty-four minutes, that make in all 354 days eight hours and forty-eight minutes.

Both of these years are called Astronomical, to distinguish them from that vulgarly used, which is termed Civil or Political.

Though nations may not agree amongst themselves in the manner of determining their years, some regulating them by the sun's motion, and others by the moon's, they however generally use the solar year in chronology. It seems at first, that as the lunar years are shorter than the solar, that inequality should produce some error in chronological calculations. But it is to be observed, that the people who used lunar years, added a certain number of intercalary days to make them agree with the solar; which reconcile them with each other, or at least, if there be any difference, it may may be neglected, when the question is only to determine the year in which a fact has happened.

In chronology there are certain times distinguished by some great event, to which all the rest are referred. * These are called Epochs, from a Greek word, which signifies to stay, because we stay there to consider, as from a resting-place, all that has happened before or after, and by that means to avoid anachronisms, that is to say, those errors which induce confusion of times.

The choice of the events which are to serve as epochs, is arbitrary, and a writer of history may take such as best suit his plan.

When we begin to compute years from one of these points distinguished by a considerable event, the enumeration and series of such years is called Æras. There are almost as many Æras as there have been different nations. The principal, and most used, are those of the World, of Jesus Christ, of the Olympiads, and of Rome. I should have been glad to have used all the four in the Chronological Table at the end of my history. But the narrow compass of these pages, obliges me to confine myself to the two most famous, that is to say, that of the World, and that of Jesus Christ.

Every body knows, that the Olympiads derive their origin from the Olympick games, which were celebrated in Peloponnesus, near the city of Olympia. These games were so solemn, that Greece made them her epoch for computing her years. By Olympiad is meant the space of four years complete, which is the time that elapsed between one celebration of games and another. The first used by chronologers begins, according to Usher, in the summer of the year of the World 3228, before Christ 776. When the time on which an event happened is reckoned by the Olympiads, authors say the first, second, or third, &c. year of such an Olympiad; which being once known, it is easy to find the year of the world to which the same fact is to be referred; and in like manner, when the year of the world

* ἔπος.
world is known, it is easy to find that of the Olympiad which agrees with it.

Rome was built, according to Varro's Chronology, in the year of the world 3251, and the 753d before Jesus Christ. Cato dates the foundation of that city two years later, in the year of the world 3253, before Jesus Christ 751. I shall follow the opinion of the latter in my Roman history. The years reckoned from this epoch are called indifferently years of Rome, or years from the foundation of the city.

The Julian period is also a famous æra in chronology, used principally for reckoning the years before Christ. I am going to explain wherein this period consists, and its use: But first I must give the reader an idea of the three cycles, of which it is composed.

By the word cycle, the revolution of a certain number of years is understood.

The Solar Cycle is a term of twenty-eight years, which includes all the variations that the Sundays and days of the week admit, that is to say, at the end of twenty-eight years the seven first letters of the alphabet, which are used in the calendar for noting the day of the week, and which are called Dominical letters, return in the same order in which they were at first. To understand what I have now said, it must be observed, that if the year had only fifty-two weeks, there would be no change in the order of the dominical letters. But as it has a day more, and two in leap-year, that produces all the variations included in the space of twenty-eight years, of which the solar cycle consists.

The Lunar Cycle, called also the Golden Number, is the revolution of nineteen years, at the end of which the moon returns, within an hour and a half, to the same point with the sun, and begins its lunations again in the same order as at first. We are indebted for the invention of the cycle to Methon, a famous Athenian astronomer. Before the invention of the epacts, it was used for marking the days of the new moon in the calendar.
Befides these two cycles, chronologers admit a third also, called Indiction. This is a revolution of fifteen years, of which the first is called the first Indiction, the second the second Indiction, and so on to the fifteenth, after which they begin again to count the first Indiction, &c.

The first Indiction is generally supposed to have begun three years before the birth of Christ.

If these three cycles, that is to say, 28, 19 and 15, are multiplied by each other, the product will be 7980, which is what is called the Julian period.

One of the properties of this period, is to give the three characteristick cycles of each year, that is to say, the current year of each of the three cycles; for example, every body knows that the vulgar era commences at the year 4714 of the Julian period. If that number be divided by 28, what remains * after the division, shews the solar cycle of that year. In the same manner the lunar cycle and the Indiction may be found. It is demonstrated, that the three numbers which express these three cycles, cannot be found again in the same order in any other year of the Julian period. It is the same in respect to the cycles of other years.

If we trace this period back to its first year, that is to say, to the year when the three cycles, of which it is composed, began, we shall find it precede the creation of the world 710 years; supposing the creation to precede the vulgar era only 4004 years.

This period is called Julian, because it is made to agree with the years of Julius Cæsar. Scaliger invented it to reconcile the systems that divided the chronologers concerning the length of time elapsed since the beginning of the world. There are who believe that only 4004 years of the world are to be reckoned before Jesus Christ. Others give more extent to that space, and augment the number of years of which it consists. These variations disappear when the Julian period

* I say what remains, and not the quotient, as some authors do; for the quotient expresses the number of cycles elapsed since the beginning of the period, and what remains after the division, shews the year of the current cycle.

period is used, for every body agrees in respect to the year in which it began, and there is nobody who does not know, that the first year of the vulgar era falls in the 4714th of that period. Thus in the Julian period there are two fixed points, which unite all systems, and reconcile all chronologers.

It is easy to find the year of the Julian period, that answers to any year whatsoever of the vulgar era of the world. For as the beginning of the Julian period precedes that era 710 years, by adding that number to the year proposed of the era of the world, we have the year of the Julian period that answers to it. For instance, we know that the battle of Arbela was fought in the year of the world 3673. If to that number we add 710, it will be 4383, which number expresses the year of the Julian period, to which the battle of Arbela is to be referred.

It remains for me to say a few words upon the order I have observed in my Chronological Table. At first I proposed to make as many columns as there are different nations in my book, whose history falls out in the same times, and to place them all in the same line with each other, in order that all the events that happened in the same year might be seen at one view. But, besides my not having sufficient room to place so many columns side by side with each other, I found that I should have been obliged to leave too many blank spaces, which would have considerably lengthened the tables, and in consequence swelled the volume, that, as it is, is very large. I therefore chose to separate the Carthaginians and Syracufans, and to give their chronology apart. The histories of those two people are abundantly interwove with each other, and have little relation to those of the other nations of whom I have treated.

The reader knows, that hitherto I have not entered into chronological discussions, and undoubtedly does not expect that I should do so now. I shall generally follow Usher, whom I have chosen for my guide in this subject.
Nimrod, founder of the first empire of the Assyrians.

Ninus, the son of Nimrod.

Semiramis; she reigned 42 years.

Ninyas.

The history of the successors of Ninyas for thirty generations, except of Phul and Sardanapalus, is unknown.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>EGYPT.</th>
<th>GREECE.</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1816</td>
<td>Menes, or Mesraim, first king of Egypt.</td>
<td></td>
<td>2188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1815</td>
<td>Bu`Siris.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1820</td>
<td>Oysmandias.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1820</td>
<td>Uchoreus.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1820</td>
<td>Moeris.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>Foundation of the kingdom of Sicyon.</td>
<td></td>
<td>2089</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2084</td>
<td>The king-shepherds seize the lower Egypt. They reign 260 years.</td>
<td></td>
<td>2084</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2084</td>
<td>Abraham enters Egypt, where Sarah is in great danger from one of the king-shepherds.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1920</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2148</td>
<td>Foundation of the kingdom of Argos. Deluge of Ogyges in Attica.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1856</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2179</td>
<td>Thetmosis expels the king-shepherds, and reigns in the lower Egypt.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1825</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2276</td>
<td>Rameses-Miamum begins to reign in Egypt. He persecutes the Israelites.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2298</td>
<td>Jacob goes into Egypt with his family.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1706</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2427</td>
<td>Cecrops carries a colony from Egypt, and founds the kingdom of Athens.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1577</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2448</td>
<td>Foundation of the kingdom of Athens by Cecrops. He institutes the Areopagus.</td>
<td></td>
<td>1556</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vol. VII. X
2494. Amenophis, the eldest son of Rameses, succeeds him.

2513. The Israelites quit Egypt. Amenophis is swallowed up in the Red-sea. Sesostris his son succeeds him. He divided Egypt into thirty names, or districts, renders Ethiopia tributary, conquers Asia, and subjects the Scythians as far as the Tanais. On his return into Egypt he kills himself after a reign of 33 years.

2547. Pheron succeeds Sesostris.

2800. Proteus. In his reign Paris is driven into Egypt on his return to Troy with Helen.

2991. Pharaoh, king of Egypt, gives his daughter in marriage to Solomon.

3026. Sesac, otherwise called Sefonchis. It was with him that Jeroboam took refuge.
A.M. 2488. Under Cranaus, successor of Cecrops, happens Deucalion's flood. Foundation of the kingdom of Lacedaemonia, of which Lelex is the first king.

2530. Danaus, brother of Sesostris, leaves Egypt, and retires into the Peloponnese, where he makes himself master of Argos. Perseus, the fifth of Danaus's successors, having unfortunately killed his grandfather, abandons Argos, and founds the kingdom of Mycæne.

2628. Sisyphus, the son of Æolus, makes himself master of Corinth.

2710. The descendants of Sisyphus are driven out of Corinth by the Heraclidae.

2720. Ægæus, the son of Pandion, king of Attica. The expedition of the Argonauts is dated in the reign of this prince.

2800. The Heraclidae make themselves masters of Peloponnesus, from whence they are obliged to retire soon after.

2820. Troy taken by the Greeks.

2900. The Heraclidae re-enter Peloponnese, and seize Sparta, where the brothers Eurytænus and Procles reign together.

2934. Institution of the Archons at Athens. Medon, the son of Codrus, is the first.

2943. Cadmus builds the city of Thebes, and makes it the seat of his government.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3033</td>
<td>Sesac marches against Jerusalem, and conquers Judaea.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3063</td>
<td>Zara, king of Egypt, makes war with Asa, king of Judah.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anyssis. In his reign Sabacus, king of Ethiopia, makes himself master of Egypt, reigns there fifty years, after which he retires, and leaves the kingdom to Anyssis.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3120</td>
<td>Lycurgus.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3160</td>
<td>Homer. Hesiod lived about the same time.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3210</td>
<td>Caranus founds the kingdom of Macedonia.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3228</td>
<td>Beginning of the common era of the Olympiads.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
I return to the chronology of the Assyrians, Ant. J. C. which I discontinued, because from Ninyas, down to about this time, nothing is known of their history.

ASSYRIANS.

| 3233. | Phul, the king of Nineveh, who repented upon Jonah's preaching. |
| 3237. | Sardanapalus, the last king of the first empire of the Assyrians. After a reign of twenty years, he burns himself in his palace. |

The first empire of the Assyrians, which ended at the death of Sardanapalus, had subsisted more than 1450 years. Out of its ruins three others were formed, that of the Assyrians of Babylon, that of the Assyrians of Nineveh, and that of the Medes.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3261</td>
<td>First war between the Messenians and Lacedaemonians. It continues twenty years.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3285</td>
<td>Sehon. He reigned fourteen years.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3280</td>
<td>Archilochus the famous poet.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The 8th year of his reign he took Samaria, and carried away the people into captivity.
Tharaka reigns 18 years.
Anarchy two years in Egypt.
1200 years of the principal lords of Egypt seize the kingdom, of which each governs a part with equal authority.

Second war between the Lacedaemonians and Messenians 14 years.
3286. Gyges. He puts Candaules to death, and reigns in his stead.

3287. Sennacherib. In the fifth year of his reign he makes war against Hezekiah, king of Judah.
   An angel destroys his army at the time he is besieging Jerusalem.
   On his return to his kingdom, he is killed by his two sons.

3294. Asarhaddon.

3296. Dejoces causes himself to be declared king of the Medes, 3334. Psammithicus, one of the twelve kings, defeats the other eleven, and remains sole master of Egypt. He takes Azoth after a siege of 29 years.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>BABYL.</th>
<th>NINEVEH.</th>
<th>MEDIA.</th>
<th>LYDIA.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3323</td>
<td>Asarhad-don unites the empire of Babylon with that of Nineveh.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3324</td>
<td>Death of Gyges. Ardys his son succeeds him. In his reign, of 49 years, the Cimmerians made themselves masters of Sardis.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3327</td>
<td>Asarhad-don carries the remains of the kingdom of Israel into Assyria. The same year he puts Manasséh in chains, and carries him into Babylon.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
3364. Tyrteus, a poet who excelled in celebrating military virtue.

Thales of Miletus, founder of the Ionick sect.
TABLE.

NIN. ET BAB. MEDIA. LYDIA.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A. M.</th>
<th>3335-3347-3356'</th>
<th>Death of Dejoe...</th>
<th>657.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3335.</td>
<td>Saosduchin, or Nabuchadonosor I. The twelfth year of his reign he defeats Phraortes, king of the Medes, and takes Ecbatana. It was after this expedition that he made Holophernes besiege Bethulia.</td>
<td>648.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3347.</td>
<td>Death of Nabuchadonosor. Saracus, called also Chynaladaneus, succeeded him.</td>
<td>635.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3356.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Phraortes perishes at the siege of Nineveh with part of his army. Cyaxares his son succeeds him. The second year of his reign he beats the Assyrians, and attacks Nineveh, the siege of which he is obliged to abandon by a sudden irruption of the Scythians into his dominions.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
3388. Nechao. The seventh year of his reign he defeats the king of Assyria, and seizes part of his dominions. He reigned sixteen years.
A. M.
3373.

NABOPOLASAR'S revolt against Saracus.
He makes himself master of Babylon.

Cyaxares joins his forces with those of Nabopolassar, takes Nineveh, and puts Saracus its king to death.

Destruction of Nineveh. From thenceforth Babylon was the capital of the Assyrian empire.

3378.

3385.

A. M.
631.

ALYATTES. He continues the siege of Miletus, which had been carried on six years by his father, and puts an end to it six years after by concluding a peace with the besieged. In the same prince's reign there was a war between the Medes and Lydians, which was terminated by the marriage of Cyaxares with Aryenis the daughter of Alyattes.
Solon.
The seven sages of Greece lived about this time.
Alceus, from whom the Alcaick verses take their name.
Sappho, at the same time.

3404. Psammis six years.

3400. 604.
Nabopolassar associates his son Nabuchadonosor in the empire, and sends him at the head of an army to re-conquer the countries taken from him by Necho.

Jerusalem taken by Nabuchadonosor. He transports a great number of Jews to Babylon, and amongst them the prophet Daniel.

The captivity begins from this carrying away the Jews to Babylon.

Death of Nabopolassar. His son Nabuchadonosor II. succeeds him in all his dominions.

Nabuchadonosor's first dream interpreted by Daniel.

Astyages, the son of Cyaxares, gives his daughter in marriage to Cam-3410. Apries. He makes himself master of Sidon, in the first year of his reign.

3411. Zedekiah, king of Judah, makes an alliance with the king of Egypt, contrary to the advice of the prophet Jeremiah.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>TABLE</th>
<th>323</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>BABYLON.</td>
<td>MEDIA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A. M.</td>
<td>Ant. J. C.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cambyses, king of Persia.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

3405. Nabuchadonosor's lieutenants, after having ravaged Judæa, blockaded Jerusalem, and put king Jehoiakim to death. About the end of the same year, Nabuchadonosor repairs in person to Jerusalem, makes himself master of it, and appoints Zedekiah king instead of Jehoiachin, whom he carries into captivity.

Birth of Cyrus:

3409. Death of Cyaxares. Astyages his son succeeds him. He reigns thirty-five years.

3416. Nabuchadonosor Cyrus goes for the first time into Jerusalem, and carries Media, to see his captive Zedekiah grandfather Astyages. He remains in Babylon. At his return three years with his dominions. Y 2 3430. Unfortunate expedition of Apries into Libya. Amaasis revolts against Apries.
3432. Nabuchadonosor subjects Egypt, and confirms Amaasis in the throne.

3440. Thespis reforms tragedy. Pythagoras lived about this time.

3444. Simonides, the celebrated poet.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>BABYLON</th>
<th>MEDIA</th>
<th>LYDIA</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>ons he causes the three young Hebrews to be thrown into the furnace.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| 3432. | Nabuchadnezzar makes himself master of Tyre, after a siege of thirteen years. He did not march against Egypt till after this expedition. |     |     |
| 3434. | Nabuchadnezzar's second dream interpreted by Daniel. |     |     |
| 3435. | Nabuchadnezzar reduced to the condition of beasts during seven years, after which he reigns again one year. Evil-Merodach his son succeeds him. He reigns only two years. |     |     |

| 3442. | Croesus. | 562. |

Æsop lived in Y 3 suc- |
3445. Pisistratus makes himself master of Athens.

3460. Hypponax, author of the verse Scazon. Heraclitus, chief of the sect which bears his name.
3445. preparations for succeeds him, the same time with war against the known in the Medes, and calls scripture under Cræsuf to his aid. the name of Da-

3445. Ant. J. C.

3445. 559.

Cyrus returns into Media for the second time, in order to assist his uncle in the war with the Babylo-3447. 557.

Cyrus returns into Media for the second time, in order to assist his uncle in the war with the Babylo-

3447. Expedition of Cyrus against the king of Arme-3448. 556.

Cyaxares and Cyrus defeat the Babylonians in a great battle, in which Nerigliflor is slain.

3448. Cyrus flies before Cyrus.

3449. L A B Y N I T, called in scripture Belshazzar.

3449. 555.

About this time the marriage of Cyrus with the daughter of his uncle Cyaxares may be dated.

3456. Battle of Thym-brea betweenCræ-sus and Cyrus, fol-

3456. 548.

3456. Followed with the taking of Sardis by the latter.

End of the kingdom of Lydia.
3478. Psammenitus. He reigns only six months. After the death of that prince, Egypt is annexed to the Persian dominions, and continues so till the reign of Alexander the Great, which includes the space of two hundred and six years.

3479. Death of Pisistratus. 526. Hippias his son succeeds him. 525.
3466. Cyrus makes himself master of Babylon.

Labynit is killed at the taking of Babylon. The death of that prince puts an end to the Babylonian empire, which is united with that of the Medes.

3468. Death of Cyaxares.

After the death of Cyaxares and Cambyses, Cyrus, who succeeded both in their dominions, united the empire of the Medes with those of the Babylonians and Persians, and of the three formed a fourth under the name of the empire of the Persians, which subsisted two hundred and six years.

Empire of the Persians.

3468. Cyrus. The first year of his reign he permits the Jews to return into Judæa.
3470. Daniel's vision concerning the succession of the kings of Persia.
3475. Cyrus dies on a tour which he makes into Persia, after his having reigned seven years alone, and thirty from his setting out from Persia at the head of an army to aid Cyaxares.

Cambyses his son succeeds him. The fourth year of his reign he attacks Egypt, and reunites it to the empire of the Persians.
3490. Miltiades goes to settle in the Chersonesus.

3496. The Pisistratidae are obliged to abandon Attica.
A.M.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>TABLE.</th>
<th>PERSIANS</th>
<th>Ant. J. C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3480.</td>
<td>Unsuccessful expedition of Cambyses against the Ethiopians.</td>
<td>524.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3481.</td>
<td>Cambyses puts Meroe, who was both his sister and wife, to death.</td>
<td>523.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>It was about this time that Oretes, one of the Satraps of Cambyses, made himself master of the island of Samos, and caused Polycrates, the tyrant of it, to be put to death.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3482.</td>
<td>Death of Cambyses. Smerdis the Magus, who had mounted the throne before the death of Cambyses, succeeds him. He reigns only seven months.</td>
<td>522.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3483.</td>
<td>Darius the son of Hytaspes.</td>
<td>521.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3485.</td>
<td>Edict of Darius in favour of the Jews, wherein that of Cyrus is repealed. It is believed, that what is related in the history of Esther, happened some time after the publication of this edict.</td>
<td>519.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3488.</td>
<td>Babylon revolts against Darius, and is taken after a siege of twenty months.</td>
<td>516.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3490.</td>
<td>Expedition of Darius against the Scythians.</td>
<td>514.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3496.</td>
<td>Darius penetrates into India, and reduces all that great country into subjection.</td>
<td>508.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The history of the Greeks from henceforth will be intermixed and almost confounded with that of the Persians, for which reason I shall separate their chronology no farther.

PERSIANS AND GREEKS.

| 3501.  | The Persians form the siege of the capital of the island of Naxos, and are obliged to raise it in six months. | 503. |
| 3502.  | Aristagoras, governor of Miletus, revolts from Darius, and brings the Ionians and Athenians into his measures. | 502. |
| 3504.  | The Ionians make themselves masters of Sardis, and burn it. | 500. |
| 3507.  | The Persians defeat the Ionians in a sea-fight before the island of Lados, and make themselves masters of Miletus. | 497. |

AESCHYLUS.

| 3510.  | Darius sends Gobryas his son-in-law at the head of an army to attack Greece. | 494. |

ANACREON.

| 3513.  | Darius takes the command of his armies from Gobryas, and gives it to Datis and Artaphernes. | 491. |

Battle
332

CHRONOLOGICAL

PERSIANS AND GREEKS.

A. M.

3514. Battle of Marathon. 490.
3515. Unfortunate end of Miltiades. 489.
3519. Death of Darius Hydaspes. Xerxes his son succeeds him. 485.
3520. Birth of the historian Herodotus. 484.
3524. Xerxes sets out to make war against the Greeks. 480.
      Battle of Thermopylae. Leonidas, king of the Lacedaemonians, is killed in it. Sea-fight near Artemisium, at the same time as the battle of Thermopylae.
      Birth of Euripides.
      Battle of Salamin, followed by the precipitate return of Xerxes into Persia.
3525. Battle of Platae. Sea-fight the same day near Mycale, in which the Persians are defeated. 479.
3526. The Athenians rebuild the walls of their city, which had been demolished by Xerxes, notwithstanding the opposition of the Lacedaemonians. 478.
3528. The command of the armies of Greece, of which the Lacedaemonians had been in possession from the battle of Thermopylae, is transferred to the Athenians. 476.
      Pindar flourished about this time.
3530. Pausanias, general of the Lacedaemonians, accused of holding secret intelligence with Xerxes, is put to death. 474.
3531. Themistocles, the Athenian general, is accused of having had a share in Pausanias's plot, and takes refuge with Admetus, king of the Molossians. 473.
      Sophocles and Euripides appear in Greece about this time.
3532. Xerxes is killed by Artabanus, the captain of his guards. 472.
      Artaxerxes, surnamed Longimanus, succeeds him. Themistocles takes refuge in his court the first year of his reign. 471.
3533. Cimon receives the command of the armies at Athens. The year following he defeats the Persians, and takes their fleet near the mouth of the river Eurymedon. 470.
      Birth of the historian Thucydides.
      Great earthquake at Sparta in the reign of Archidamus, which makes way for a sedition of the Helots.
3534. Birth of Socrates. 469.
      Beginning of Pericles.
3535. Phidias, famous for his skill in architecture and sculpture.
      Difference and misunderstanding between the Athenians and Lacedaemonians, occasioned by the affront offered to the Athenians by the Lacedaemonians in sending back back their troops, after having called in their aid against the Messenians and Helots. Some time after, and in consequence of this quarrel, Cimon is banished by the Ostracism.

337. Esdras obtains a commission from Artaxerxes to return to Jerusalem with all that are willing to follow him.

338. Themistocles puts an end to his life at Magnesia.

339. Herodicus of Sicily, chief of the sect of physicians, called Diasthenes. Hippocrates was his disciple.

340. The Egyptians, supported by the Athenians, revolt against Artaxerxes.

341. Defeat of the Persian army in Egypt.

342. In consequence of which all Egypt returns to its obedience to Artaxerxes, and the Athenians retire to Danarus, where they sustain a siege of a year.

343. Battle of Tanagra in Boeotia, where the Athenians beat the Spartans, who were come to the aid of the Boeotians.

344. Nehemiah obtains Artaxerxes's permission to return to Jerusalem.

345. Cimon is recalled from banishment after five years absence, reconciles the Athenians and Spartans, and makes them conclude a truce of five years.

346. End of the war between the Greeks and Persians, which had continued, from the burning of Sardis by the Athenians, fifty-one years.

347. Death of Cimon.

348. The Lacedæmonians conclude a truce for thirty years with the Athenians. The latter soon break it by new enterprizes.

349. Empedocles, the Pythagorean philosopher, flourished about this time.

350. Myron, the famous sculptor of Athens.

351. Pericles makes war with the Samians, and takes the capital of their island after a siege of nine months.

352. Zeuxis, the famous painter, disciple of Apollodorus.

353. Parrhasius his rival lived at the same time.

354. Aristophanes, the comic poet.

356. War between the Corinthians and the people of Corcyra. The Athenians engage in it in favour of the Corcyreans. The inhabitants of Potidæa declare on the side of Corinth against Athens. Alcibiades begins to appear in this war, which occasions that of Péloponeus.

357. Scopas, architect and sculptor.
3573. Beginning of the Peloponnesian war. It subsists twenty-seven years.

3574. A terrible plague rages in Attica. The physician Hippocrates distinguishes himself by his extraordinary care of the sick.

3575. Death of Pericles.

3576. The Lacedæmonians besiege Plataea.

3579. Death of Artaxerxes. Xerxes his son succeeds him. He reigns only forty-five days. Sogdianus puts Xerxes to death, and causes himself to be acknowledged king in his stead. His reign continues only six months.

3580. Ochus, known under the name of Darius Notius, raids himself of Sogdianus, and succeeds him.

The Athenians, under Nicias, make themselves masters of Cythera. Thucydides is banished by the Athenians, whose army he commanded, for having suffered Amphipolis to be taken.

Polygnatus, famed particularly for his painting in the portico called Thisian at Athens, in which he represented the principal events of the Trojan war.

3583. Treaty of peace concluded by the application of Nicias, between the Lacedæmonians and Athenians, in the tenth year from the beginning of the Lacedæmonian war. Alcibiades, by an imposture, occasions its being broke the following year.

3584. The banishment of Hyperbolus puts an end to the Ostracism.

3588. Alcibiades engages the Athenians to assist the people of Egefta against the Syracusans.

3589. Alcibiades, one of the generals sent to Sicily by the Athenians, is recalled to Athens, to answer accusations against him. He flies to Sparta, and is condemned for contumacy.

3590. Pisithnes, governor of Syria, revolts against Darius. The Egyptians do the same, and chuse Amyrtæus for their king, who reigns six years.

3593. Alcibiades, to avoid the envy which his great actions had drawn upon him at Sparta, throws himself into the arms of Tissaphernes, one of the king of Persia's satraps. The Lacedæmonians, by the help of Tissaphernes, conclude a treaty of alliance with the king of Persia.

3595. Alcibiades is recalled to Athens. His return occasions the abolition of the Four Hundred, who had been invested with supreme authority.

Darius gives Cyrus, his youngest son, the government in chief of all the provinces of Asia minor.

Lyserper
Table

A.M. Persians and Greeks.

Ant. J. C.

3598. Lysander is placed at the head of the Lacedæmonians. He defeats the Athenians near Ephesus. In consequence of that defeat Alcibiades is deposed, and ten generals are nominated to succeed him.

3599. Callicrัดidas has the command of the army in the room of Lysander, from whom the Lacedemonians had taken it. He is killed in a sea-fight near the Argunise.

Lysander is restored to the command of the Lacedæmonian army. He gains a famous victory over the Athenians at Ægospotamos.

Conon, who commanded the Athenian forces, retires after his defeat to Evagoras, king of Cyprus.

3600. Lysander makes himself master of Athens, changes the form of the government, and establishes thirty Archons, commonly called the thirty Tyrants.

End of the Peloponnesian war.

3601. Interview of Cyrus the younger and Lysander at Sardis. Thrafybulus expels the tyrants of Athens, and re-establishes its liberty.

3602. Cyrus the younger prepares for a war with his brother Artaxerxes.

3603. Defeat and death of Cyrus the younger at Cunaxa, followed by the retreat of the Ten Thoußand. Death of Socrates.

3604. Lacedæmon declares war against Tissaphernes and Pharnabafus.

3606. Beginning of Amyntas, king of Macedonia, father of Philip.

3607.  Agesilaus is elected king of Sparta. The year following he goes to Attica, to the aid of the Greeks settled there.

3609. Lysander quarrels with Agesilaus, and undertakes to change the order of the succession to the throne.

The army of Tissaphernes is defeated near Sardis by Agesilaus.

3610. Thebes, Argos, and Corinth, enter into a league against Lacedæmon, at the solicitation of the Persians. Athens enters into the same league soon after. Agesilaus is recalled by the Ephori to the assistance of his country.

The fleet of the Lacedæmonians is defeated near Cnidos by Pharnabafus, and Conon the Athenian, who commanded that of the Persians and Greeks. Agesilaus defeats the Thebans almost at the same time in the plains of Coronæa.

Conon rebuilds the walls of Athens.

Peace shameful to the Greeks concluded with the Persians by Antalcides the Lacedæmonian.

Artaxerxes attacks Evagoras, king of Cyprus, with all his forces, and gains a signal victory over him. It is followed by the siege of Salamin, which is terminated by a treaty of peace.

Expedition of Artaxerxes against the Cadusians.
Birth of Aristotle, founder of the Peripatetick.

The Lacedæmonians declare war against the city of Olynthus.

Birth of Philip, king of Macedon.

Phæbidas, on his way to the siege of Olynthus at the head of part of the army of the Lacedæmoni-ans, makes himself master of the citadel of Thebes.
Birth of Demosthenes.

Pelopidas, at the head of the rest of the exiles, kills the tyrants of Thebes, and retakes the citadel.

Artaxerxes Mnemon undertakes to reduce Egypt, that had thrown off his yoke for some years. He employs above two years in making preparation for that war.

Death of Amyntas, king of Macedonia. Alexander his eldest son succeeds him. He reigns only two years. Perdiccas ascends the throne next, and reigns fourteen years.

Death of Evagoras, king of Cyprus. Nicocles his son succeeds him.

Battle of Leuctra, in which the Thebans, under Epaminondas and Pelopidas, defeat the Lacedæmoni-ans.

Expedition of Pelopidas against Alexander, tyrant of Phææ. He goes to Macedonia to terminate the differences, between Perdiccas and Ptolemy son of Amyntas, concerning the crown. He carries Philip with him to Thebes as an hostage. He is killed in a battle which he fights with the tyrant of Phææ.

Battle of Mantinea. Epaminondas is killed in it, after having secured the victory to the Thebans.

The Lacedæmonians send Agesilaus to aid Tachos, king of Egypt, against Artaxerxes. He dethrones Tachos, and gives the crown to Neæanæus. He dies on his return from that expedition.

Death of Artaxerxes Mnemon. Ochus his son succeeds him.

Philip ascends the throne of Macedonia. He makes a captious peace with the Athenians.
The history of the Cappadocians begins at this time, the chronology of whose kings I shall give after that of Alexander's successors. I shall annex to it that of the Parthians, and of the kings of Pontus.

3646. War of the allies with the Athenians. It continued three years. Philip besieges and takes Amphipolis.

3648. Revolt of Artabasus against Ochus king of Persia.

3649. Demosthenes appears in public for the first time, and encourages the Athenians, alarmed by the preparations of war making by the king of Persia.

Beginning of the sacred war.

3650. Death of Mausolus, king of Caria.

3651. Philip makes himself master of the city of Methone.

3652. Artemisia, widow of Mausolus, to whom she had succeeded, takes Rhodes.

3653. Successful expedition of Ochus against Phoenicia, Cyprus, and afterwards Egypt.

3654. Neatanebus, the last king of Egypt of the Egyptian race, is obliged to fly into Ethiopia, from whence he never returns.

3656. Death of Plato.

3658. Philip makes himself master of Olynthus.

3662. Oration of Demosthenes, concerning the Chersonesus in favour of Diopithus.

3665. The Athenians send aid under Phocion to the cities of Perinthus and Byzantium, besieged by Philip. That prince is obliged to raise the siege.

3666. Philip is declared generalissimo of the Greeks in the council of the Amphictyons. He makes himself master of Elaea.

Battle of Cheronaea, wherein Philip defeats the Athenians and the Thebans, who had entered into a league against him.

Ochus, king of Persia, is poisoned by Bagoas his favourite. Arses, his son, succeeds him, and reigns only three years.

3667. Philip causes himself to be declared general of the Greeks against the Persians. The same year he repudiates...
CHRONOLOGICAL

A. M.

PERSIANS AND GREEKS.

Ant. J. C.

Philip's death. ALEXANDER, his son, then twenty years of age, succeeds him.

Darius Codomarus succeeds him.

Thebes taken and destroyed by Alexander. He causes himself to be declared generalissimo of the Greeks against the Persians in a diet assembled at Corinth.

Alexander sets out for Persia.

Battle of the Granicus, followed with the conquest of almost all Asia minor.

Alexander is taken at Tarfus with a dangerous illness, from having bathed in the river Cydnus. He is cured in a few days.

Battle of Issus.

Alexander makes himself master of Tyre, after a siege of seven months.

Apeles, one of the most famous painters of antiquity. Aristides and Protagoras were his contemporaries.

Alexander goes to Jerusalem. He makes himself master of Gaza, and soon after of all Egypt. He went after this conquest to the temple of Jupiter Ammon, and at his return built the city of Alexandria.

Darius is seized and laden with chains by Besitus, and soon after assassinated. His death puts an end to the Persian empire, which had subsisted two hundred and six years from its foundation under Cyrus the Great.

The Lacedæmonians revolt against the Macedonians. Antipater defeats them in a battle, wherein Agis their king is killed.

Thalestris, queen of the Amazons, comes to see Alexander at Zadracrata.

Philotas and Parmenio, his father, suspected of having conspired with others against Alexander, are put to death.

Besitus is brought to Alexander, and soon after put to death.

Alexander, after having subdued the Sogdians and Bactrians, builds a city upon the Iaxartes, to which he gives his name.

Embassy of the Scythians to Alexander, followed by a victory gained by him over that people.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>PERSIANS AND GREEKS.</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3677.</td>
<td>Alexander's entrance into India. He gains a great victory over Porus in passing the Hydaspes.</td>
<td>327.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3679.</td>
<td>Alexander's marriage with Statira, the eldest daughter of Darius. Revolt of Harpalus, whom Alexander had made governor of Babylon. Demosthenes is banished for having received presents, and suffered himself to be corrupted by Harpalus.</td>
<td>325.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3680.</td>
<td>Death of Hephæstion at Ecbatana. Menander, the inventor of the new comedy, lived about this time.</td>
<td>324.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3681.</td>
<td>Alexander, on his return to Babylon, dies there, at the age of two-and-thirty years and eight months. Aridæus, that prince's natural brother, is declared king in his stead. The regency of the kingdom is given to Perdiccas. The generals divide the provinces amongst themselves. From this division commences the era of the empire of the Lagides in Egypt. The Athenians revolt, and engage the states of Greece to enter into a league with them. Demosthenes is recalled from banishment.</td>
<td>323.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3682.</td>
<td>Antipater is besieged in Lamia by the Athenians, and forced to surrender by capitulation. He soon after seizes Athens, and puts a garrison into it. Death of Demosthenes.</td>
<td>322.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3684.</td>
<td>Eumenes defeated by Antigonus, shuts himself up in the castle of Nora, where he sustains a siege of a year.</td>
<td>320.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHRONOLOGICAL

A. M. PERSIANS AND GREEKS. Ant. J. C.

Ptolemy makes himself master of Jerusalem. 319.

Death of Antipater. Polyperchon succeeds him.

Phocion's condemnation and death at Athens. 317.

Cassander, son of Antipater, seizes Athens, and settles Demetrius Phalereus there to govern the republic. 315.

Olympias, the mother of Alexander, causes Aridaeus, and Euridice his wife, to be put to death, as she herself is soon after by order of Cassander. 313.

Eumenes is delivered up to Antigonus by his own soldiers, and put to death. 311.

Antigonus takes Tyre after a siege of fifteen months. Demetrius his son, surnamed Poliorcetes, begins to appear.

Seleucus makes himself master of Babylon, and the neighbouring provinces. At this expedition of Seleucus against Babylon begins the famous era of the Seleucides, called by the Jews the era of contracis.

Ptolemy retires into Egypt, and carries a great number of the inhabitants of Phoenicia and Judaea thither along with him. 312.

Cassander causes Roxana, and her son Alexander, to be put to death. 310.

Polyperchon puts Hercules, the son of Alexander, and his mother Berenice to death. 309.

Ophellas, governor of Libya, revolts against Ptolemy. 308.

Demetrius Poliorcetes makes himself master of Athens, and re-establishes the democratical government. The same year he makes himself master of Salamin, and the whole island of Cyprus.

Demetrius Phalereus, who commanded at Athens, retires to Thebes. The Athenians throw down his statues, and condemn him to death. 306.

Antigonus, and his son Demetrius, assume the title of kings. The other princes follow their example, and do the same. 305.

Antigonus, to make the most of his son's victory in Cyprus, undertakes to deprive Ptolemy of Egypt. That expedition does not succeed. 304.

Ptolemy the astronomer fixes the beginning of the reign of Ptolemy king of Egypt on the 7th of November of this year.

Demetrius Poliorcetes forms the siege of Rhodes, which he is forced to raise a year after. 303.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>PERSIANS AND GREEKS</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3701</td>
<td>The Rhodians employ the money raised by the sale of the machine, which Demetrius had used in the siege of their city, and had given them as a present, in erecting the famous Colossus, called the Colossus of Rhodes.</td>
<td>303</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3702</td>
<td>Demetrius Poliorcetes is declared general of all the Greeks by the states of Greece assembled at the Isthmus.</td>
<td>302</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ptolemy, Seleucus, Cassander, and Lysimachus, enter into a league against Antigonus, and Demetrius his son.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Battle of Ipsus, wherein Antigonus is defeated. It is followed by the division of the empire of Alexander amongst the four allied princes.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Argesilaus, founder of the middle academy.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
There is so much connection between the events, which happen in the four empires formed out of Alexander's, that it is impossible to separate them. For which reason I shall dispose them all in one column, according to the plan I have followed in treating them in the body of my history. I shall first give a table, that contains only the kings that reigned in each of those kingdoms.

EGYPT. SYRIA. MACEDO-THRACE NIA. AND BITHYNIA.

3707. Philip and Alexander, the sons of Cassander, dispute the kingdom, and possess it almost three years.
3710. Demetrius Poliorcetes.
3717. Pyrrhus and Lysimachus.
3719. Ptolemy Philadelphus.
3723. Lygimachus is killed in a Seleucus battle. After Nicator, his death his a very short dominions are time. dismembered, and <table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3724</td>
<td>Antiochus Soter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3726</td>
<td>Ptolemy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3728</td>
<td>Demetrius, son of Antigonus Gonatas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3732</td>
<td>Seleucus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3738</td>
<td>Antiochus the Great</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3743</td>
<td>Ptolemy Philopator</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3758</td>
<td>Seleucus Evergetus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3762</td>
<td>Philip</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3772</td>
<td>Ptolemy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3778</td>
<td>Seleucus Ceraunus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3781</td>
<td>Ptolemy Epiphanes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3783</td>
<td>Seleucus Philopator</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

and cease to form a distinct kingdom.
344

CHRONOLOGICAL

EGYPT. SYRIA. MACEDONIA.

A.M. Ant. J.C.

3825. Perseus, the last king of the Macedonians.

3829. Antiochus Epiphanes.

3840. Antiochus Eupator.

3842. Demetrius Soter.

3854. Alexander Balas.

3859. Ptolemy Demetrius Physcon.

3860. Nicator.

3864. Antiochus Theos, the son of Balas, seizes part of Syria. Tryphon does the same soon after.

3865. Antiochus Sidotæs puts Tryphon to death, and reigns in his room.

3877. Zebina succeeds Demetrius Nicator.

3884. Seleucus, the son of Nicator.

3887. Ptolemy Lathyrus.

3890. Antiochus, the Cyzicenian, divides the kingdom with Grypus.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>EGYPT</th>
<th>SYRIA</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3897</td>
<td>Alexander I. brother of Lathyrus</td>
<td>Seleucus, son of Grypus</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3907</td>
<td></td>
<td>Antiochus Eusebes</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3911</td>
<td></td>
<td>Antiochus, second son of Grypus</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3912</td>
<td></td>
<td>Philip, third son of Grypus</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3913</td>
<td></td>
<td>Demetrius Euchernes, fourth son of Grypus</td>
<td>90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3914</td>
<td></td>
<td>Antiochus Dionysius, fifth son of Grypus</td>
<td>85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3919</td>
<td></td>
<td>The four last named kings reigned successively with Eusebes</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3921</td>
<td></td>
<td>Tigranes, during fourteen years</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3923</td>
<td>Alexander II. son of Alexander I</td>
<td></td>
<td>69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3935</td>
<td></td>
<td>Antiochus Asiaticus</td>
<td>65</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3939</td>
<td>Ptolemy Auletes</td>
<td></td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3946</td>
<td>Berenice, the eldest daughter of Auletes, reigns some time in his stead, after which that prince is restored</td>
<td></td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3953</td>
<td>Cleopatra reigns at first with her eldest brother, then with Ptolemy, her youngest brother, and at last alone</td>
<td></td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHRONOLOGICAL

A.M. SUCCESSORS OF ALEXANDER. Ant. J.C.
3704. Seleucus, king of Syria, builds Antioch. 300.
3707. Death of Cauander, king of Macedon. Philip, his son, succeeds him. He reigns only one year, and is succeeded by Alexander his brother. About this time Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, ephouses Antigone, of the house of Ptolemy, and returns into his dominions, out of which he had been driven by the Molossi.
3709. Demetrius Poliorcetes retakes Athens. Lydusmacus and Ptolemy, almost at the same time, deprive him of all he possessed.
3710. Demetrius puts to death Alexander king of Macedon, who had called him in to his aid, and seizes his dominions, where he reigns seven years.
3711. Foundation of the city of Seleucia by Seleucus.
3717. Pyrrhus and Lydusmacus take Macedonia from Demetrius. The latter dies miserably the year following in prison.
3719. Ptolemy Soter, king of Egypt, reigns the throne to his son Ptolemy Philadephus.
3721. Demetrius Phalereus is shut up in a fort by order of Philadephus, and kills himself there.
3722. Seleucus Nicator, king of Syria, declares war against Lydusmacus, king of Macedonia.
3723. Lydusmacus is killed in a battle in Phrygia. Seleucus enters Macedonia to take possession of the kingdom. He is assassinated there by Ceraunus. Antiochus Soter, his son, succeeds him in the kingdom of Syria.
3724. Ceraunus, to secure the kingdom of Macedonia to himself, puts the two children of Seleucus by Arsinoe to death, and banishes her into Samothracia. The republick of the Achaens resumes its ancient form, which it had lost under Philip and Alexander. Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, called in by the Tarentines, goes to Italy to make war against the Romans. He gives them battle for the first time near Heraclea, where the advantage is entirely on his side. He is again successful in a second battle fought the year following.
3725. Irruption of the Gauls into Macedonia. Ceraunus gives them battle, in which he is killed. Meleager his brother succeeds him.
3726. Pyrrhus abandons Italy, and goes to Sicily, which he conquers. Sosthenes drives the Gauls out of Macedonia. He is made king there, and reigns two years. Attempt of the Gauls upon the temple of Delphos. Ptolemy <table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>Successors of Alexander</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3727</td>
<td>Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, caues the holy scriptures to be translated into Greek.</td>
<td>277.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3728</td>
<td>Death of Sothines. Antigonus Gonatas, son of Poliorcetes, who reigned afterwards during ten years in Greece, makes himself king of Macedonia in his room. Antiochus, king of Syria, disputes the possession of it with him. Their difference terminates by the marriage of Antigonus with Phila, the daughter of Stratonice and Seleucus.</td>
<td>276.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3729</td>
<td>Antiochus defeats the Gauls in a bloody battle, and delivers the country from their oppressions. By this victory he acquires the name of Soter.</td>
<td>275.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3730</td>
<td>Pyrrhus returns into Italy, and is defeated by the Romans. He goes to Macedonia, where he attacks and defeats Antigonus. Ptolemy Philadelphus, in effect of the reputation of the Romans, sends an embassy to them to demand their amity.</td>
<td>274.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3732</td>
<td>Pyrrhus undertakes the siege of Sparta, and cannot reduce it. He is killed the next year at the siege of Argos.</td>
<td>272.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3736</td>
<td>Antigonus Gonatas makes himself master of Athens, which had entered into a league with the Lacedaemonians against him.</td>
<td>268.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3739</td>
<td>Abantidas makes himself tyrant of Sicyon, after having put Clinias, its governor, to death. Magas, governor of Cyrenaica and Libya, revolts against Ptolemy Philadelphus.</td>
<td>255.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3741</td>
<td>Death of Philenterus, king, and founder of Pergamus. Eumenes, his nephew, succeeds him.</td>
<td>263.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3743</td>
<td>Antiochus Soter, king of Syria, causes his son Antiochus to be proclaimed king. He dies soon after. Berosus of Babylon, the historian, lived about this time.</td>
<td>261.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3746</td>
<td>Accommodation between Magas and Ptolemy Philadelphus.</td>
<td>258.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3749</td>
<td>War between Antiochus, king of Syria, and Ptolemy Philadelphus.</td>
<td>255.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3752</td>
<td>Aratus, the son of Clinias, delivers Sicyon from tyranny, and unites it with the Achaean league.</td>
<td>252.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3754</td>
<td>Arsaces revolts against Agathocles, governor for Antiochus in the country of the Parthians. About the same time Theodorus, governor of Bactriana, revolts, and causes himself to be declared king of that province.</td>
<td>250.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3755</td>
<td>Treaty of peace between Antiochus and Ptolemy Philadelphus, which puts an end to the war. By one of the conditions of that treaty, Antiochus repudiates Laodice, and marries Berenice, Ptolemy's daughter.</td>
<td>249.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
348  CHRONOLOGICAL

A.M.  SUCCESSORS OF ALEXANDER.  Ant. J.C.

3756.  Agis, king of Sparta, endeavours to revive the ancient institutions of Lycurgus. Leonidas, his colleague, is deposed for refusing to consent to it. Cleombrotus, his son-in-law, reigns in his stead.

3758.  Antiochus, surnamed Theos, king of Syria, is poisoned by his wife Laodice. She afterwards causes her son Seleucus Callinicus to be declared king. Berenice, and her son by Antiochus, are assassinated by Laodice.

3760.  The cities of Smyrna and Magnesia enter into an alliance to aid the king of Syria against Ptolemy Evergetes. Aratus makes himself master of the citadel of Corinth.

3762.  Death of Antigonus Gonatas, king of Macedonia. Demetrius his son succeeds him.

3763.  Death of Eumenes, king of Pergamus. Attalus, his cousin-german, succeeds him.

3764.  Eratosthenes the Cyrenian is made librarian to Ptolemy Evergetes.

3771.  Joseph, nephew of the high-priest Onias, is sent ambassador to Ptolemy Evergetes.

3772.  Death of Demetrius, king of Macedonia. Antigonus, guardian of Philip, son of Demetrius, succeeds him.

3774.  Seleucus, king of Syria, is defeated and taken prisoner by Arfaces, king of the Parthians.

3776.  Cleomenes, king of Sparta, gains a great victory over the Achæans and Aratus.

3778.  Seleucus Callinicus, king of Syria, dies amongst the Parthians of a fall from an horse. Seleucus Ceranus, his eldest son, succeeds him. Antiochus Hierax is assassinated by thieves on leaving Egypt.

Aratus defeats Aristippus, tyrant of Argos. He prevails upon Lyziades, tyrant of Megalopolis, to renounce the the tyranny, and make his city enter into the Achæan league.

3779. The Romans send a famous embassy into Greece, to impart to the Greeks the treaty they had lately concluded with the Illyrians. The Corinthians declare by a publick decree, that they shall be admitted to share in the celebration of the Ithmian games. The Athenians also grant them the freedom of Athens.

Antigonus, king of Macedonia, by the management of Aratus, is called in to aid the Achæans against the Lacedæmonians.

3781. Cleomenes, king of Sparta, takes Megalopolis. Battle of Selasia, followed with the taking of Sparta by Antigonus.

Death of Seleucus Ceraunus, king of Syria. Antiochus his brother, surnamed the Great, succeeds him.

3782. The Colossus of Rhodes is thrown down by a great earthquake.

Death of Ptolemy Evergetes, king of Egypt. Ptolemy Philopator succeeds him.

The Ætolians gain a great victory at Caphyæ over the Achæans.

3783. Antiochus reduces Molon and Alexander, who had revolted against him two years before, the first in Media, the second in Persia.

Death of Antigonus, king of Macedonia. Philip, the son of Demetrius, succeeds him.

Cleomenes, king of Sparta, dies in Egypt. The Lacedæmonians elect Agesipolis and Lycurgus to succeed him.

War of the allies with the Ætolians, in favour of the Achæans.

3784. Hermias, prime minister of Antiochus, is put to death by that prince's orders.

3785. Battle of Raphia, between Ptolemy king of Egypt, and Antiochus king of Syria.

Treaty of peace between Philip king of Macedonia and the Achæans on one side, and the Ætolians on the other, which puts an end to the war of the allies.

3786. Antiochus besieges Acaæus, who had revolted in Sardis, and after a siege of two years he is delivered up by the treachery of a Cretan.

Hannibal's alliance with Philip, king of Macedonia.

3787. Philip receives a considerable blow from the Romans at the siege of Apollonia.

3788. Carneades, founder of the new academy.

3790. Antiochus undertakes to reduce the provinces which had thrown off the yoke of the Syrian empire, and effects it in the space of seven years.
A. M. Succессors of Alexander. Ant. J. C.

3793. Alliance of the Ætolians with the Romans. Attalus, king of Pergamus, enters into it. The Lacedaemonians come into it some short time after.

3796. Famous battle between Philip king of Macedonia and the Ætolians near Elis. Philopoemen distinguishes himself in it.

3798. Battle of Mantinaea, wherein Philopoemen defeats Machanidas, tyrant of Sparta, who perishes in it.

3800. Treaty of peace between Philip and the Romans. All the allies on both sides are included in it.

3799. Polibius is said to have been born this year.

3801. League between Philip of Macedon, and Antiochus king of Syria, against the young king of Egypt.

3802. Philip, king of Macedonia, is defeated by the Rhodians in a sea-fight off the island of Chio. That prince's cruel treatment of the Cyaneans seems to be properly dated the following year.

3803. Philip besieges and takes Abydos.

3804. The Romans declare war with Philip. P. Sulpitius is appointed to command in it. He gains a considerable victory near the town of Octolophai in Macedonia.

3805. Villicus succeeds Sulpitius in the command of the army against Philip. The year following Flaminius is sent to succeed Villicus.

3806. Antiochus, king of Syria, subjects Palestine and Cælesyria.

3807. The Achæans declare for the Romans against Philip. Interview of Philip and the confab Flaminius. Nabis, tyrant of Sparta, declares for the Romans. The Boeotians do the same.

3808. Treaty of peace between Philip and the Romans, which puts an end to the war.

3809. Flaminius makes war against Nabis, the tyrant of Sparta.

3813. Philopoemen gains a considerable advantage over Nabis, near Sparta.

The
A.M. SUCCESSIONS OF ALEXANDER. Ant. J.C.

The Aëtolians resolve to seize Demetrias, Chalcis, and Sparta, by treachery and stratagem.

Nabis is killed. Philopomen makes the Lacedæmonians enter into the Achæan league.

Antiochus goes to Greece to the aid of the Aëtolians.

The Romans declare war against him, and soon after defeat him near the ftreights of Thermopylae.

Battle of Magnesia, followed by a treaty of peace, which puts an end to the war between the Romans and Antiochus, that had subsisted about two years.

The philosopher Panætius was born about this time.

The consul Fulvius forces the Aëtolians to submit to the Romans. Manlius, his colleague, almost at the same time subjects all the Gauls in Asia.

The cruel treatment of the Spartans by their exiles, supported by Philopomen, happened this year.

Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, is killed in the temple of Jupiter Belus, which he had entered in order to plunder it. Seleucus Philopator succeeds him.

Philopomen is taken before Messene, by Dinocrates, and put to death.

Demetrius, son of Philip, king of Macedonia, is unjustly accused by his brother Perseus, and put to death.

Death of Ptolemy Epiphanes, king of Egypt. Ptolemy Philometer succeeds him.

Death of Philip, king of Macedonia. Perseus his son succeeds him.

Seleucus Philopator, king of Syria, is poifoned by Heliodorus, whom he had sent a little before to take Jerusalem. He is succeeded by Antiochus Epiphanes.

Antiochus Epiphanes causes Onias the high-priest of Jerusalem to be deposed, and sets Jason in his place.

War between Antiochus and Ptolemy Philometer.

The Romans declare war against Perseus. That prince has some advantage in the first battle near the river Peneus.

Antiochus Epiphanes makes himself master of all Egypt. He marches afterwards to Jerusalem, where he commits unheard-of cruelties.

The Alexandrians, in the room of Philometer, who had fallen into the hands of Antiochus, make Ptolemy Evergetes, his younger brother, king.

Philometer is set at liberty the same year, and unites with his brother. That union induces Antiochus to renew the war.

Paulus Æmilius is charged with the Macedonian war against Perseus. He gains a famous victory over that prince.
prince near Pydna, which puts an end to the kingdom of Macedonia. It was not reduced, however, into a province of the Roman empire till twenty years after.

The praetor Anicius subjects Illyria in thirty days.

Popilius, one of the ambassadors sent by the Romans into Egypt, obliges Antiochus to quit it, and come to an accommodation with the two brothers.

Antiochus, exasperated at what had happened in Egypt, turns his rage against the Jews, and sends Apollonius to Jerusalem.

The same year he publishes a decree to oblige all nations in subjection to him to renounce their own religion, and conform to his. This law occasions a cruel persecution amongst the Jews.

Antiochus goes in person to Jerusalem, to see his orders put in execution. The martyrdom of the Maccabees, and the death of Eleazer, happened at that time.

Paulus Æmilius abandons the cities of Epirus to be plundered by his army, for having taken Perseus's part. The Achæans, suspected of having favoured that prince, are sent to Rome, to give an account of their conduct. The senate banish them into different towns of Italy, from whence they are not suffered to return home till seventeen years after. Polybius was of this number.

Prusias, king of Bithynia, goes to Rome. Eumenes, king of Pergamus, is not permitted to enter it.

Death of Mattathias. Judas, his son, succeeds him, and gains many victories over the generals of Antiochus.

Antiochus Epiphanes is repulsed before Elymaïs, where he intended to plunder the temple. He marches towards Judæa, with design to exterminate the Jews. The hand of God strikes him on the way, and he dies with the most exquisite torments. Antiochus Eupator, his son, succeeds him.

Antiochus Eupator marches against Jerusalem. He is soon after obliged to return into Syria, in order to expel Philip of Antioch, who had made himself master of his capital.

Difference between Philometer, king of Egypt, and Physon his brother, which do not terminate till after the expiration of five years.

Octavius, ambassador for the Romans in Syria, is assassinated.

Demetrius Soter, the son of Seleucus Philopator, flies from Rome, where he had been kept as an hostage, to Syria, where he causes Antiochus Eupator to be put to death, and seizes the throne.

Death of Judas Maccæus.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>Successors of Alexander</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3844.</td>
<td>Demetrius is acknowledged king of Syria by the Romans.</td>
<td>160.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3845.</td>
<td>Death of Eumenes, king of Pergamus. Attalus Philometer succeeds him.</td>
<td>159.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3848.</td>
<td>War between Attalus and Prusias.</td>
<td>156.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3851.</td>
<td>Alexander Bala pretends himself the son of Antiochus Epiphanes, and in that quality attempts to cause himself to be acknowledged king of Syria.</td>
<td>153.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3852.</td>
<td>Andricus of Adramyttium pretends himself the son of Perseus, and undertakes to cause himself to be declared king of Macedonia. He is conquered, taken, and sent to Rome by Metellus.</td>
<td>152.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3854.</td>
<td>Demetrius Soter is killed in a battle between him and Alexander Bala. His death leaves the latter in possession of the empire of Syria.</td>
<td>150.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3856.</td>
<td>Macedonia is reduced into a province of the Roman empire.</td>
<td>148.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3857.</td>
<td>Troubles in Achaia promoted by Diaeus and Critolaus. The commissioners sent thither by the Romans are insulted.</td>
<td>147.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3858.</td>
<td>Metellus goes to Achaia, where he gains several advantages over the Achæans. Mummius succeeds him, and, after a great battle near Leucopetra, takes Corinth, and entirely demolishes it. Greece is reduced into a Roman province under the name of the province of Achaia.</td>
<td>146.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The sequel of the history of the kings of Syria is much embroiled, for which reason I shall separate it from that of the Egyptians, in order to complete its chronology.

SYRIA.

3859. Demetrius Nicator, son of Demetrius Soter, defeats Alexander Bala, and ascends the throne.

3860. Antiochus, surnamed Theos, son of Bala, supported by Tryphon, makes himself master of part of the kingdom.

Tryphon gets Jonathan into his hands, and puts him to death at Ptolemais. The year following he murders his pupil Antiochus, and seizes the kingdom of Syria.

3863. Demetrius marches against the Parthians. After some small advantages he is taken prisoner.

3864. Antiochus Sidetes, the second son of Demetrius Soter, marries Cleopatra, the wife of his brother Demetrius Nicator; and after having put Tryphon to death, he is declared king himself.
EGYPT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3859</td>
<td>Death of Ptolemy Philometer. PTOLEMY PHYSCON, 145.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>his brother, succeeds him.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3866</td>
<td>Death of Attalus, king of Pergamus. ATTALUS, 138.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>his nephew, surnamed PHILOMETER, succeeds him. He reigns five years.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
3869. Antiochus Sidetes besieges Johannes Hyrcanus in Jerusalem, and takes the city by capitulation.

3873. Antiochus marches against the Parthians, and gains many advantages over them. They send back Demetrius the year following.

3874. Demetrius Nicator reigns again in Syria.

3877. Demetrius is killed by Alexander Zebina, who takes his place, and causes himself to be acknowledged king of Syria.

3880. Seleucus V. eldest son of Demetrius Nicator, is declared king, and soon after killed by Cleopatra. Antiochus Grypus succeeds him.

3882. Zebina is defeated by Grypus, and dies soon after.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A. M.</th>
<th>EGYPT</th>
<th>Ant. J. C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3868.</td>
<td>The cruelties of Phyfcon at Alexandria, oblige most of the inhabitants to quit the place.</td>
<td>136.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3871.</td>
<td>Attalus Philometer, king of Pergamus, at his death leaves his dominions to the Roman people.</td>
<td>133.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>ANDRONICUS seizes them.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3874.</td>
<td>The consul Perpenna defeats Andronicus, and sends him to Rome. The kingdom of Pergamus is reduced the year following into a Roman province by Manius Aquilius.</td>
<td>130.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Phyfcon repudiates Cleopatra, his first wife, and marries his daughter of the same name. He is soon after obliged to fly, and the Alexandrians give the government to Cleopatra, whom he had repudiated.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3877.</td>
<td>Phyfcon reascends the throne of Egypt.</td>
<td>127.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3882.</td>
<td>Phyfcon gives his daughter in marriage to Grypus, king of Syria.</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Cleopatra attempts to poison Grypus, and is poisoned herself.

Antiochus, the Cyzicenian, son of Cleopatra and Antiochus Sidetes, takes arms against Grypus. He has the worst in the beginning; but in two years obliges his brother to divide the kingdom of Syria with him.

Death of Grypus. Seleucus his son succeeds him.

Antiochus the Cyzicenian is defeated, and put to death.

Seleucus is defeated by Eusbes, and burnt in Mopsuestia.

Antiochus Eusbes, the son of the Cyzicenian, causes himself to be declared king. He marries Selena, the widow of Grypus.
3887. Death of Phylson. Ptolemy Lathyurus succeeds him. Cleopatra, his mother, obliges him to repudiate Cleopatra, his eldest sister, and to marry Selena, his youngest.

3891. Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, gives the kingdom of Cyprus to Alexander, her youngest son.

3897. Cleopatra drives Lathyrus out of Egypt, and places his brother Alexander upon the throne.

3900. Signal victory of Lathyrus over Alexander, king of the Jews, upon the banks of the Jordan.

3901. Cleopatra forces Lathyrus to raise the siege of Ptolemais, and takes that city herself.

3903. Cleopatra takes her daughter Selena from Lathyrus, and makes her marry Antiochus the Cyzicenan.
A. M.

3912. Antiochus, brother of Seleucus, and second son of Grypus, assumes the diadem. He is presently after defeated by Eusebes, and drowned in the Orontes.

3913. Philip, his brother, third son of Grypus, succeeds him.

3914. Demetrius Eucheres, fourth son of Grypus, is established king at Damascus by the aid of Lathyrus.

3916. Eusebes, defeated by Philip and Demetrius, retires to the Parthians, who re-establish him upon the throne two years after.

3919. Demetrius having been taken by the Parthians, Antiochus Dionysius, the fifth son of Grypus, is set upon the throne, and killed the following year.

3921. The Syrians, weary of so many changes, choose Tigranes, king of Armenia, for their king. He reigns fourteen years by a viceroy.

Eusebes takes refuge in Cilicia, where he remains concealed.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3915</td>
<td>Alexander kills his mother Cleopatra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3916</td>
<td>Alexander is expelled, and dies soon after; Lathyrus is recalled</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3922</td>
<td>Lathyrus ruins Thebes in Egypt, where the rebels, he had before defeated, had taken refuge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3923</td>
<td>Death of Lathyrus. Alexander II, son of Alexander I, under the protection of Sylla, is elected king</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
3935. Tigranes recalls Magdalaus his viceroy in Syria.

Antiochus Asiaticus takes possession of some parts of Syria, and reigns four years. Pompey deprives Antiochus Asiaticus of his dominions, and reduces Syria into a Roman province.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>TABLE</th>
<th>Ant. B.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3928</td>
<td>3928.</td>
<td>76.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>{ Death of Nicomedes, king of Bithynia. His kingdom is reduced into a Roman province; as is Cyrenaica the same year. }</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3939</td>
<td>3939.</td>
<td>65.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Alexander is driven out of Egypt. Ptolemy Auletes, Lathyrus's natural son, is set in his place.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3946</td>
<td>3946.</td>
<td>58.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Romans depose Ptolemy, king of Cyprus, and seize that island. Cato is charged with that commission. Ptolemy Auletes is obliged to fly from Egypt. Berenice, the eldest of his daughters, is declared queen in his stead.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3949</td>
<td>3949.</td>
<td>55.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gabinius and Anthony restore Auletes to the entire possession of his dominions.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3953</td>
<td>3953.</td>
<td>51.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Death of Ptolemy Auletes. He leaves his dominions to his eldest son and daughter, the famous Cleopatra.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3956</td>
<td>3956.</td>
<td>48.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Pothinus and Achillas, the young king's guardians, deprive Cleopatra of her share in the government, and drive her out of Egypt.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3957</td>
<td>3957.</td>
<td>47.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Death of the king of Egypt. Cæsar places Cleopatra upon the throne with Ptolemy her youngest brother.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3961</td>
<td>3961.</td>
<td>43.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cleopatra poisons her brother when he comes of age to share the sovereign authority according to the laws. She afterwards declares for the Roman triumviri.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3963</td>
<td>3963.</td>
<td>41.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cleopatra goes to Anthony at Tarsus in Cilicia. She gains the ascendant of him, and carries him with her to Alexandria.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3971</td>
<td>3971.</td>
<td>33.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anthony makes himself master of Armenia, and brings the king prisoner to Cleopatra. Coronation of Cleopatra and all her children. Rupture between Cæsar and Anthony. Cleopatra accompanies the latter, who repudiates Octavia at Athens.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3973</td>
<td>3973.</td>
<td>31.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cleopatra flies at the battle of Actium. Anthony follows her, and thereby abandons the victory to Cæsar.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3974</td>
<td>3974.</td>
<td>30.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anthony dies in the arms of Cleopatra. Cæsar makes himself master of Alexandria. Cleopatra kills herself. Egypt is reduced into a Roman province.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
3644. Ariarathes I. was the first king of Cappadocia. He reigned jointly with his brother Holophernes.

3668. Ariarathes II. son of the first. He was deprived of his dominions by Perdiccas, who sets Eumenes on the throne.

3689. Ariarathes III. ascends the throne of Cappadocia after the death of Perdiccas and Eumenes.

3720. Ariamnes.

3754. Ariarathes IV.

3814. Ariarathes V.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>PONTUS</th>
<th>Ant. J.C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3490</td>
<td>The kingdom of Pontus was founded by Darius the son of Hystaspes, in the year 3490. Artabazus was the first king of it. His successors down to Mithridates are little known.</td>
<td>514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3600</td>
<td>Mithridates I. He is commonly considered as the founder of the kingdom of Pontus.</td>
<td>404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3638</td>
<td>Ariobarzanes. He reigns twenty-six years.</td>
<td>366</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3667</td>
<td>Mithridates II. He reigns thirty-five years.</td>
<td>337</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3702</td>
<td>Mithridates III. reigns thirty-six years. The reigns of the three kings who succeed him, include the space of an hundred years. The last of them was Mithridates IV. great-grandfather of Mithridates the Great.</td>
<td>302</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3819</td>
<td>Pharnaces, son of Mithridates IV.</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHRONOLOGICAL

A M. CAPPADOCIA. PAR TH I A N EMPIRE.

3840. MITHRIDATES I. Ant. J. C.

3842. ARIARATHES VI. surnamed Philopator. 162.

3875. ARIARATHES VII.

3913. ARIARATHES VIII. Mithridates, king of Pontus, puts him to death, and sets his son upon the throne. Soon after ARIARATHES IX. takes Cappadocia from the son of Mithridates, who is presently after re-established by his father.

3914. SYLLA enters Cappadocia, drives the son of Mithridates out of it, and sets Ariobarzanes I. upon the throne.

3915. TIGRANES, king of Armenia, drives Ariobarzanes out of Cappadocia, and reinstates the son of Mithridates.

MNASCHIRES, and after him SINATROCES. These two princes reign about twenty years.
Mithridates V. surnamed Evergetes.

3881. Mithridates VI. surnamed the Great. 123.

3913. Mithridates seizes Cappadocia, and makes his son king of it.

3915. Beginning of the war between Mithridates and the Romans.

3916. Mithridates causes all the Romans in Asia minor to be massacred in one day.

Archelaus, one of the generals of Mithridates, seizes Athens, and most of the cities of Greece.
Sylla obliges Mithridates to restore Cappadocia to Ariobarzanes. Tigranes dispossesses him of it a second time. After the war with Mithridates, Pompey reinstates Ariobarzanes. His reign, and the very short one of his son, continue down to about the year 3953.

3935: Phraates III. who assumes the surname of the Good.
TABLE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>PONTUS</th>
<th>Ant. J. C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3917</td>
<td>Sylla is charged with the war against Mithridates. He retakes Athens after a long siege.</td>
<td>87.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3918</td>
<td>Victory of Sylla over the generals of Mithridates near Charonea. He gains a second battle soon after at Orchromenes.</td>
<td>86.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3920</td>
<td>Treaty of peace between Mithridates and Sylla, which terminates the war.</td>
<td>84.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3921</td>
<td>Mithridates puts his son to death. Second war between Mithridates and the Romans. It subsists something less than three years.</td>
<td>83.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

3923. Mithridates makes an alliance with Sertorius.
3929. Beginning of the third war of Mithridates against the Romans. Lucullus and Cotta are placed at the head of the Roman army.
3930. Cotta is defeated by sea and land, and forced to shut himself up in Chalcedon. Lucullus goes to his aid.
3931. Mithridates forms the siege of Cyzicum. Lucullus obliges him to raise it at the end of two years, and pursues and beats him near the Granicus.
3933. Mithridates defeated in the plains of Cebiræ. He retires to Tigranes.
3934. Lucullus declares war against Tigranes, and soon after defeats him, and takes Tigranocerta, the capital of Armenia.
3936. Lucullus defeats Tigranes and Mithridates, who had joined their forces near the river Arsamia.
3937. Mithridates recovers all his dominions, in effect of the misunderstandings that take place in the Roman army.
3948. Mithridates, eldest son of Phraates.
3950. Orodes.
Unfortunate expedition of Crassus against the Parthians.
3953. Ariobarzanes III.
He is put to death by Cassius.
3962. Ariarathes X.
Ventidius, general of the Romans, gains a victory over the Parthians, which retrieves the honour they had lost at the battle of Carræ.
3973. M. Anthony drives Ariarathes out of Cappadocia, and sets Archelaus in his place. On the death of that prince, which happened in the year of the world 4022, Cappadocia was reduced into a Roman province.
Pompey is appointed to succeed Lucullus. He gains many advantages over Mithridates, and obliges him to fly.

Tigranes surrenders himself to Pompey.

Pompey makes himself master of Caina, in which the treasures of Mithridates were laid up.

Death of Mithridates. Pharnaces his son, whom the army had elected king, submits his person and dominions to the Romans.
Syracuse is said to have been founded in the year of the world 3295, before Christ 709.

3520. Gelon's beginning.

3525. Gelon is elected king of Syracuse. He reigns five or six years.

3532. Hiero I. He reigns eleven years.

3543. Thrasylulus. In a year's time he is expelled by his subjects.

3544. The Syracusans enjoy their liberty during sixty years.

3589. The Athenians, assisted by the people of Segesta, undertake the siege of Syracuse under their general Nicias. They are obliged to raise it at the end of two years. The Syracusans pursue and defeat them entirely.

3593. Beginning of Dionysius the Elder.

3598. Dionysius, after having deposed the ancient magistrates of Syracuse, is placed at the head of the new ones, and soon after causes himself to be declared generalissimo.

3600. Revolt of the Syracusans against Dionysius upon account of the taking of Gela by the Carthaginians. It is followed by a treaty of peace between the Carthaginians and Syracusans, by one of the conditions of which, Syracuse is to continue in subjection to Dionysius. He establishes the tyranny in his own person.

New troubles at Syracuse against Dionysius. He finds means to put an end to them.
Carthage was founded in the year of the world 315 B.C., before Christ 846.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3501</td>
<td>First treaty between the Carthaginians and Romans. It appears that the Carthaginians had carried their arms into Sicily before this treaty, as they were in possession of part of it, when it was concluded. But what year they did so is not known.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3520</td>
<td>The Carthaginians make an alliance with Xerxes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3523</td>
<td>The Carthaginians, under Amilcar, attack the Greeks settled in Sicily. They are beaten by Gelon.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3592</td>
<td>The Carthaginians send troops under Hannibal to aid the people of Segesta against the Syracusans.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3595</td>
<td>Hannibal and Imilcon are sent to conquer Sicily. They open the campaign with the siege of Agrigentum.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3600</td>
<td>The war made by the Carthaginians in Sicily is terminated by a treaty of peace with the Syracusans.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
A. M. SYRACUSE. Ant. J. C.

3605. Dionyfius makes great preparations for a new war with the Carthaginians.
3607. Maffacre of all the Carthaginians in Sicily, followed by a declaration of war, which Dionyfius caused to be signified to them by an herald, whom he dispatched to Carthage.
3615. Dionyfius takes Reginium by capitulation. The next year he breaks the treaty, and makes himself master of it again by force.
3632. Death of Dionyfius the Elder. His son Dionyfius the Younger succeeds him. By the advice of Dion, his brother-in-law, he causes Plato to come to his court.
3643. Dionyfius makes Arete his sister, the wife of Dion, marry Timocrates, one of his friends. That treatment makes Dion resolve to attack the tyrant with open force.
3644. Dion obliges Dionyfius to abandon Syracuse. He fets fail for Italy.
3646. Callippus causes Dion to be assassinated, and makes himself master of Syracuse, where he reigns about thirteen months.
3647. Hipparinus, brother of Dionyfius the Younger, drives Callippus out of Syracuse, and establishes himself in his place for two years.
3654. Dionyfius reinstated.
3656. The Syracusans call in Timoleon to their aid.

3657. Dionyfius is forced by Timoleon to surrender himself, and to retire to Corinth.
3658. Timoleon abolishes tyranny at Syracuse, and throughout Sicily, the liberty of which he reinstates.
3685. Agathocles makes himself tyrant at Syracuse.
3607. Imilcon goes to Sicily with an army to carry on the war against Dionysius. It subsists four or five years.

3654. Second treaty of peace concluded between the Romans and Carthaginians.

3656. The Carthaginians make a new attempt to seize Sicily. They are defeated by Timoleon, sent by the Corinthians to the aid of the Syracusans. Hannu, citizen of Carthage, forms the design of making himself master of his country.

3672. Embassy of Tyre to Carthage, to demand aid against Alexander the Great.

3685. Beginning of the wars between the Carthaginians and Agathocles in Sicily and Africa.
3724. A Roman legion seizes Rhegium by treachery.

3729. Hiero and Artemidorus are made supreme magistrates by the Syracusan troops.

3736. Hiero is declared king by the Syracusans.

3741. Appius Claudius goes to Sicily to aid the Mamertines against the Carthaginians. Hiero, who was at first against him, comes to an accommodation with him, and makes an alliance with the Romans.

3763. Hiero sends the Carthaginians aid against the foreign mercenaries.

3786. Hiero goes to meet the consul Tib. Sempronius, in order to offer him his services against the Carthaginians.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>CARThAGE</th>
<th>Q.</th>
<th>A.M.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3727</td>
<td>The Carthaginians send the Romans aid under Mago against Pyrrhus.</td>
<td>277</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3741</td>
<td>Beginning of the first Punic war with the Romans. It subsists twenty-four years.</td>
<td>263</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3743</td>
<td>The Romans besiege the Carthaginians in Agrigentum, and take the city after a siege of seven months.</td>
<td>261</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3745</td>
<td>Sea-fight between the Romans and Carthaginians near the coast of Myle.</td>
<td>259</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3749</td>
<td>Sea-fight near Ecnome in Sicily.</td>
<td>255</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3750</td>
<td>REGULUS in Africa. He is taken prisoner. XANTHIPPI comes to the aid of the Carthaginians.</td>
<td>254</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3755</td>
<td>Regulus is sent to Rome to propose the exchange of prisoners. At his return the Carthaginians put him to death with the most cruel torments.</td>
<td>249</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3756</td>
<td>Siege of Lilybæum by the Romans.</td>
<td>248</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3757</td>
<td>Defeat of the Carthaginians near the islands Ægates, followed by a treaty, that puts an end to the first Punic war.</td>
<td>241</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3767</td>
<td>The Carthaginians give up Sardinia to the Romans, and engage to pay them 1200 talents.</td>
<td>237</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3776</td>
<td>AMILCAR is killed in Spain. ASDRUBAL, his son-in-law, succeeds him in the command of the army. Hannibal is sent into Spain upon the demand of his uncle Asdrubal.</td>
<td>228</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3784</td>
<td>Asdrubal's death. HANNIBAL is made general of the army in his stead.</td>
<td>220</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3786</td>
<td>Siege of Saguntum. Beginning of the second Punic war, which subsists seventeen years.</td>
<td>218</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3787</td>
<td>Hannibal enters Italy, and gains the battles of Ticinus and Trebia.</td>
<td>217</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Hieronymus abandons the party of the Romans, and enters into an alliance with Hannibal. He is assassinated soon after. His death is followed with great troubles to Syracuse.

3792: Marcellus takes Syracuse, after a siege of three years.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A.M.</th>
<th>CARThAGE</th>
<th>Ant. J. C.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3788.</td>
<td>Battle of Thra tymenus.</td>
<td>216.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Hannibal deceives Fabius at the Streights of Cassilium.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Battle of Cannæ. Hannibal retires to Capua after this battle.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Asdrubal is beaten in Spain by the two Scipioes.</td>
<td>214.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3793.</td>
<td>The two Scipioes are killed in Spain.</td>
<td>211.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Romans besiege Capua.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3798.</td>
<td>Asdrubal enters Italy. He is defeated by the consul Livius, whom the other consul Nero had joined.</td>
<td>206.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3799.</td>
<td>Scipio makes himself master of all Spain. He is made consul the year following, and goes to Africa.</td>
<td>205.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3802.</td>
<td>Hannibal is recalled to the aid of his country.</td>
<td>202.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3803.</td>
<td>Interview of Hannibal and Scipio in Africa, followed by a bloody battle, in which the Romans gain a complete victory.</td>
<td>201.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3804.</td>
<td>Treaty of peace between the Carthaginians and Romans, which puts an end to the second Punick war.</td>
<td>200.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fifty years elapsed between the end of the second, and the beginning of the third, Punick wars.</td>
<td>194.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3810.</td>
<td>Hannibal is made prætor of Carthage, and reforms the courts of justice and the finances. After having exercised that office two years, he retires to king Antiochus at Ephesus, whom he advises to carry the war into Italy.</td>
<td>191.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3813.</td>
<td>Interview of Hannibal and Scipio at Ephesus.</td>
<td>188.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3816.</td>
<td>Hannibal takes refuge in the island of Crete, to avoid being delivered up to the Romans.</td>
<td>184.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3820.</td>
<td>Hannibal abandons the island of Crete, to take refuge with Prusias king of Bithynia.</td>
<td>182.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3822.</td>
<td>Death of Hannibal.</td>
<td>181.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3823.</td>
<td>The Romans send commissioners into Africa, to adjudge the differences that arose between the Carthaginians and Masinissa.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A. M.</td>
<td>CARTHAGE</td>
<td>Ant. J. C.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>-----------</td>
<td>-----------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3848</td>
<td>Second embassy sent by the Romans into Africa, to make new enquiries into the differences subsisting between the Carthaginians and Masinissa.</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3855</td>
<td>Beginning of the third Punic war. It subsists a little more than four years.</td>
<td>149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3856</td>
<td>Carthage is besieged by the Romans.</td>
<td>148</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3858</td>
<td>Scipio the younger is made consul, and receives the command of the army before Carthage.</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3859</td>
<td>Scipio takes and entirely demolishes Carthage.</td>
<td>145</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

End of the Chronological Table.
GENERAL INDEX

Of the Matters contained in the ANCIENT HISTORY.

A. BANTIDAS makes himself tyrant of Sicyon, V. 405

AEGAS, king of Argos, II. 281

ABDOLONYMUS is placed upon the throne of Sidon against his will, IV. 422. his answer to Alexander, 423

ABELOX, a Spaniard, his treachery, I. 248

ABRADADES, king of Susiana, engages in Cyrus's service, II. 100. he is killed in the battle of Thymbrea, 119

ABRAHAM goes to Egypt with Sarah, I. 67. the Scripture places him very near Nimrod; and why, II. 6

ABROCOMAS, one of the generals of Artexerxes Mnemon's army, marches against Cyrus the Younger, III. 323

ABSALOM, brother of Alexander Jannæus, VII. 2. he is taken prisoner at the siege of Jerusalem, 4

ABUTITES, governor of Sufa, for Darius, surrenders that place to Alexander, IV. 492. he is continued in his government, 493

ABYDOS, a city of Asia, besieged by Philip, VI. 6, &c. the tragical end of that city, 9

ACADEMY, founded at Alexandria under the name of Museum, V. 283

ACARANIANs, people of Greece, their courage, V. 551

ACCius. See Attius.

ACHAEANS, settled by Achæus in Peloponnæus, II. 287. the institution of their commonwealth, V. 403. their government, cities, of which the Achæan league is formed at first, ibid. several cities join it afterwards, 407. chiefs who rendered that republic flourishing, V. 547, 548, 562

The Achæans enter into a war with Sparta, V. 446. after many losses they call in Antigonus to their aid, 453. in a war with the Etolians, they have recourse to Philip, 520. they declare for the Romans against that prince, VI. 37. they join with the Romans against Antiochus,
INDEX.

Phoebus, VI. 102. their cruel treatment of many Spartans, 154. they subject the Messenians, 191. they send deputies to Rome concerning Sparta, 194. Callicrates, one of their deputies, betrays them, 195, &c.

The Achæans resolve to share with the Romans in the dangers of the war against Perseus, VI. 331. they are flushed by the Romans, 398. cruel treatment of them by the Romans, 400, &c. troubles in Achaia, 424. the Achæans declare war against the Lacedæmonians, ibid. they inflict the Roman commissioners, 425. they engage Thebes and Chalcis to join them, 427, 428. they are defeated by Metellus, ibid. and by Mummus, 429, &c. Achaia is reduced into a Roman province, 432

Achæmenes, brother of Xerxes, II. 442

Achæmenes, brother of Artaxerxes Mæmon, is placed at the head of the army sent by that prince against Egypt, III. 19. he is killed in a battle, ibid.

Achæus, son of Xuthus, founder of the Achæans, II. 287

Achæus, cousin of Seleucus Carausus, has the administration of the affairs of Egypt, V. 479. he avenges the death of that prince, ibid. he refuses the crown, and prefers it for Antiochus the Great, 479, 480. his fidelity to that prince, ibid. he revolts against Antiochus, 489. his power, 450. he is betrayed, and delivered up to Antiochus, and put to death, 501

Achaia, so called from Achaus. See Achæans. II. 287

Achbarians, comedy of Aristophanes; extract from it, I. cxiv

Achillas, young Ptolemy's guardian, VII. 249. he assassinates Pompey, 251. he is put to death, 257

Achitas, Corinthian, founder of Syracuse, VII. 136

Achaeus, king of Egypt, III. 411

Abydus, one of the quarters of the city of Syracuse, description of it, III. 198

Achichorius, general of the Gauls, makes an irruption into Macedonia, V. 311. then into Greece, ibid. he perishes there, 315

Acilius (Manius) is appointed to command in Greece against Antiochus, VI. 103. he defeats that prince near Thermopylae.

Acilius, a young Roman, his stratagem to make Perseus quit his asylum, VI. 370

Acarius, king of Argos, II. 282

Acrotates, son of Aeus, king of Sparta, V. 352. valour of that young prince, 356

Aditium, city famous for Anthony's defeat, VII. 281

Ada continued in the government of Caria, after the death of Idriasæns husband, IV. 386

Adherbal, general of the Carthaginians, defeats the Romans at sea, I. 194

Adimantus is appointed general of the Athenians after the battle of Arginusæ, III. 277. by what means he escapes death after his defeat at Egospotamos, 288

Admetus, king of the Molossians, gives Themistocles refuge, II. 533. he is intimidated by the Athenians, and sends him away, III. 3

Admetus, officer in Alexander's army, IV. 437

Aionis. Feasts celebrated in honour of him at Athens, III. 186

Adore. Etymology of that word, II. 248

Adver-
INDEX.

Adversity. It exalts the glory of a prince, II. 172. train of adversity, III. 396

Æcidias, son of Arymbas, king of Epirus, is driven out of his dominions by the intrigues of Philip king of Macedonia, IV. 300. he reacends the throne, ibid.

Æcides, king of Epirus, is bannished by his own subjects, V. 174

Ægeus, king of Athens, II. 284

Ægina, little island near Athens, II. 423

Ægospotamos, famous for Lynder's victory over the Athenians, III. 284

Ægyptus, name given Scopoliqes, I. 68

Æneas, supposed by Virgil co-temporary with Didò, I. 133

Ænobarbus (Dominus) consul, declares for Anthony, and retires to him, VII. 277

Æolick dialect, II. 290

Æolus, son of Hellenus, reigns in Thessaly, II. 287

Æra of Nabonassar, II. 26. æra of the Seleucides, V. 203

Æschines, Athenian orator, suffers himself to be corrupted by Philip's gold, IV. 288, 292, 317, &c. he accuses Demosthenes, 332, 367. he is cast, and retires into banishment, 333

Æsop the Phrygian: His history, II. 359. he goes to the court of Croesus, 64, 360. he is supposed to have been the inventor of fables, 361

Ætolia, one of the principal parts of Greece, II. 274

Ætolians. War of the Ætolians against the Achæans and Philip, V. 504. treaty of peace between them, 542. the Ætolians join the Romans against Philip, 550. they make peace with that prince, 591. they declare against him for the Romans, VI. 41. they condemn the treaty made between Philip and the Romans, 55. they form a resolution to seize Demetrias, Chalcis, and Lacedaemon by treachery, 94. they call in the aid of Antiochus against the Romans, 97, 98. they offer to submit to the Romans, 112. and cannot obtain peace, 114, 115. the senate, at the request of the Athenians and Rhodians, grant it them, 151. cruel treatment of them by the Romans, 379, 396, &c.

Africa, discovered by the care of Nechao, I. 88. Hanno fails round it by order of the senate, 124. fertility of Africa, 132

Agamemnon, king of Mycenae, II. 283

Agarista, wife of Megacles. Her father's conduct in choosing her an husband, II. 332

Agathocles seizes the tyranny of Syracuse, I. 161, VII. 138. his expeditions against the Carthaginians in Sicily and in Africa, I. 162, &c. he brings over Ophellas to his side, and then puts him to death, 170. miserable end of that tyrant, 171

Agathocles, governor of Parthia for Antiochus, V. 376

Agathocles, brother of Agathoclea, V. 502. his ascendant over Ptolemy Philopator, ibid. his measures for obtaining the tuition of Ptolemy Epiphanes, VI. 2. he periplies miserably, ibid.

Agathoclea, concubine of Ptolemy Philopator, V. 502. miserable end of that woman, VI. 2

Agelas of Naupactus, ambassador from the allies to Philip: Wisdom of his discourse, V. 540, &c.

Agesilaus is elected king of Sparta, III. 368, 369. his education and character, III. 368, 369, &c. he sets out for Asia, III.
INDEX.

III. 373. he differs with Lyfander, ibid. 375. his expeditions in Asia, 380, 6. Sparta appoints him generalissimo by sea and land, 384. he commissions Pifander to command the fleet in his stead, 385. his interview with Pharmabafus, ibid, the Ephori recall him to the aid of his country, 392. his ready obedience, ibid, he gains a victory over the Thebans at Coronae, in which he is wounded, 397. he returns to Sparta, 399. he always retains his ancient manners, ibid. he discovers the conspiracy formed by Lyfander, 400. different expeditions of Agefilaus in Greece, 401. he causes his brother Tendentias to be appointed admiral, ibid. Sphodrias is acquitted by his means, IV. 136. Antalcides rallies him upon his being wounded by the Thebans, 137, 138. dispute between Agefilaus and Epaminondas in the assembly of the allies at Sparta, 140. he causes war to be declared against the Thebans, 141. he finds means to save those who had fled from the battle of Leuctra, 147. his conduct in the two irruptions of the Thebans into the territory of Sparta, 149. Sparta sends aid to Tachos, king of Egypt, who had revolted against Persia, 193. actions of Agefilaus in Egypt, 194. he declares for Nectanebos against Tachos, 195. he dies on his return to Sparta, 196.

Agefilaus, uncle on the mother's side to Agis, king of Sparta, V. 428. he abuseth that prince's confidence, 429. violence which he commits when one of the Ephori, 434. he is wounded, and left for dead, 437.

Ageisopolis, king of Sparta with Agefilaus, IV. 118. difference between those two kings, 118. he commands the army sent against Olynthus, 122. his death, ibid.

Ageisopolis reigns at Sparta with Lycurgus, V. 512, 513. he is dethroned by Lycurgus, VI. 68. he retires to the camp of the Romans, ibid.

Agesistrata, mother of Agis, king of Sparta, V. 439. her death, 442.

Agiaitis, widow of Agis king of Sparta, is forced by Leonidas to marry Cleomenes, V. 443. death of that prince, 458.

Agis I. son of Eurythennes, king of Sparta, enslave the inhabitants of Elos, I. cxlv.

Agis I. son of Archidamus, king of Sparta, III. 197. he makes war against the people of Elis, 367. he acknowledges Leotychides for his son at his death, 368.

Agis III. son of another Archidamus, king of Sparta, commands the army of the Lacedaemonians against the Macedonians, and is killed in a battle, IV. 515.

Agis IV. son of Eudamidas, reigns at Sparta, V. 424. he endeavours to revive the ancient institutions of Lycurgus, 428. he effects it in part, ibid. &c. only Agefilaus prevents the final execution of that design, 434. he is sent to aid the Achaenians against the Etolians, 435. on his return to Sparta he finds a total change there, 437. he is condemned to die, and executed, 442, &c.

Agonothete, a name given to those who preided in the public games of Greece, I. lxxi.

Agriculture, esteem the ancients had for it, especially in Egypt, I. 53. in Persia, II. 211. and in Sicily, III. 77, VII. 87.

Agrigentum. Foundation of that city, III. 178. luxury and effeminacy.
Index.

minancy of its inhabitants, IV.

4. It is subjected first by the Carthaginians, I. 148. and afterwards by the Romans, 177

Acrone, prince of Illyria, V. 419

Ahaseurus, name given by the Scripture to Alyages, as also to Cambytes and Darius. See the names of the two last.

Alcibiades. When very young he carries the prize of valour in the battle against the Poti-dæans, III. 61. character of that Athenian, 164. his intimacy with Socrates, ibid, his convertibility of genius, 168, 196, 302. his passion for ruling alone, 169. his enormous expenses in the public games,
I. lxxxv. cities that supplied
those expenses, lxxxvi

Alcibiades begins to appear at Athens, III. 164. his artifice for breaking the treaty with Sparta, 171. he engages the Athenians in the war with Sicily, 173. he is elected general with Nicias and Lamachus, 179.
he is accused of having mutilated the statues of Mercury, 186. he sets out for Sicily, without having been able to bring that affair to a trial, 188. he takes Catana by surprize, 192.
he is recalled by the Athenians to be tried upon an accusation, 193. he flies and is condemned

Vol. VII.

to die for contumacy, 194. he retires to Sparta, 195. he de-bauches Timæa, the wife of Agis, and has a son by her,
197. he advises the Lacedæmonians to send Glyippus to the aid of Syracuse, 203

Alcibiades retires to Tisyl-phernes, III. 245. his credit with that satrap, ibid. his return to Athens is concerted, 249. he is recalled, 250, 256. he beats the Lacedæmonian fleet, 257.
he goes to Tissaphernes, who causes him to be seized and car-rried prisoner to Sardis, ibid. he escapes out of prison, ibid. he defeats Mindarus and Pharnabalus by sea and land the same day, 258, 259. he returns in triumph to Athens, 260. and is declared generalissimo, 262. he causes the great mysteries to be celebrated, 253. he sets sail with the fleet, 264. Thrasybulus accuses him at Athens of having occasioned the defeat of the fleet near Ephesus, 269. the command is taken from him, ibid.
he comes to the Athenian generals, at Ægosopotamos, 285.
the advice he gives them, ibid.
he retires into the province of Pharnabazus, 301. that satrap causes him to be assassinated, ibid. his character, 302, &c.

Alcibiades, one of the Spartan exiles, is reinstated by the Achaians, and sent deputy to Rome with complaints against them,
VI. 179. the Achæans condemn him to die, 182. they soon after annul that sentence, 186

Alcimus is placed at the head of Demetrius Soter's army against the Jews, VI. 471

Alcmæon, H. 331

Alcmæonidæ expelled Athens by Pittiratus, H. 335. they take the care of building the new C c temple

self to be declared generalissimo of the Greeks against the Persians, 369, 370. he returns into Macedonia, 371. and makes preparations for his expedition against the Persians, 373. he appoints Antipater to govern Macedonia as his viceroy, 374.

Alexander sets out for Asia, IV. 375. arrives at Ilium, where he renders great honours to the memory of Achilles, 376. he passes the Granicus, and gains a great victory over the Persians, 379. he besieges and takes Miletus, 383; then Halicarnassus, 384; and conquers almost all Asia minor, 386. he takes the city of Gordium, where he cuts the famous Gordian knot, 388, 389. he passes the straits of Cilicia, 390. he arrives at Tarshis, where he has a dangerous illness, occasioned by bathing in the river Cydnus, 391. he is cured of it in a few days, 394. he marches against Darius, and gains a famous victory over that prince near Issus, 400, &c. tired with pursuing Darius, he comes to that prince's camp, which his troops had just before besieged, 412. Alexander's humanity and respect for Syracambis, and the other captive princesses, 416, 494.

Alexander enters Syria, IV. 417. the treasures laid up in Damascus are delivered to him, ibid. Darius writes him a letter in the most haughty terms, 419. he answers it in the same style, 420. the city of Sidon opens its gates to him, 421. he besieges Tyre, 424, &c. after a long siege he takes that place by storm, 438. he receives a second letter from Darius, 447. he marches to Jerusalem, 448. honours paid by him to the high-priest Jaddus, 451. he enters Jerusalem, and...
INDEX.

offers sacrifices there, 452. Daniel's prophecies relating to him are shewn him, ibid. he grants great privileges to the Jews, 459. and refuses the same to the Samaritans, ibid. he besieges and takes Gaza, 460. enters Egypt, 461. makes himself master of it, 463. and begins to build Alexandria, 465. he goes to Libya, ibid. visits the temple of Jupiter Ammon, 466. and cauſes himself to be declared the son of that god, 467. he returns to Egypt, 468

Alexander, on his return to Egypt, meditates advancing againſt Darius, IV. 469. on setting out, he is informed of the death of that prince's wife, ibid. he cauſes her to be interred with very great magnificence, 470. he passes the Euphrates, 471. then the Tigris, 472. he comes up with Darius, and gains the great battle of Arbela, 485. he takes Arbela, 486. Babylon, 488. Sufa, 492. subdues the Uxii, 496. &c. feizes the passes of Sufa, 498. arrives at Peripolis, of which he makes himself master, 499. &c. and burns the palace of that city in a debauch, 502

Alexander pursues Darius, IV. 503. Befius's treatment of that prince makes him haften his march, 506. Alexander's grief on seeing the body of Darius, who had just before expired, 508. he sends it to Syfigambis, ibid. he marches against Befius, 516. Thalestris, queen of the Amazons, comes from a remote country to fee him, 519. he abandons himself to pleasure and debauch, 520. he continues his march against Befius, 523. he puts Philotas to death upon suspicion of having entered into a conspiracy against him, 531. and Parmenio his father, 532. he subdues several nations, 534. he arrives in Bactriana, ibid. his cruel treatment of the Branchides, 535. Befius is brought to him, 536

Alexander takes many cities in Bactriana, IV. 536, &c. and builds one near the Iaxartes, to which he gives his name, 538. he marches against the Sogdians, who had revolted, and destroys many of their cities, ibid. the Scythians fend ambaffadors to him, who speak with extraordinary liberty, 541. he paffes the Iaxartes, 544. gains a victory over the Scythians, 545. and treats the conquered favourably, ibid. he quells a revolt of the Sogdians, 546. he sends Befius to Ecbatana, to be punished, 547. he takes the city of Petra, ibid. &c. he abandons himself to the pleasure of hunting, in which he is in great danger, 552. he gives Clitus the command of the provinces which had been under Artabafus before, 553. he invites that officer to a feast, and kills him, 555. he undertakes various expeditions, 558. he marries Roxana, daughter of Oxyartes, 560. he resolves to march against India, and makes preparations for setting out, 560, 561. he endeavours to make his courtiers adore him after the Perian manner, 561. he puts the philofophers Caliphthenes to death, 565

Alexander sets out for India, V. 1. he takes many cities there that feem impregnable, and frequently endangers his life, 8. 9. 11. &c. he grants Taxilus his protection, 12. he paffes the river Indus, 11. then the Hydasfes, 13. and gains a famous victory over Porus, 20. he restores that prince his kingdom, C c 2 V.
V. 21. he builds Nicea and Bucephalia, 22. he advances into India, and subjects many nations, 23. he forms the design of penetrating as far as the Ganges, 29. general murmurs of his army, ibid. he renounces that design, and gives orders to prepare for returning, 33. excess of vanity which he shews in giving thanks to the gods, 34. Alexander sets out on his march to the ocean, V. 34. he is in extreme danger at the city of Oxydrape, 35. he subdues all he meets in his way, 41. he arrives at the ocean, 42. 43. prepares for his return to Europe, ibid. &c. he suffers extremely by famine in passing desart places, 44. equipage in which he passes through Carmania, 45. he arrives at Pafargada, 48. honours rendered by him to the ashes of Cyrus, 50. he puts Oisines, satrap of the province, to death, 51. he marries Statira, the daughter of Darius, 53. he pays the debts of the soldiery, ibid. he appeases a revolt amongst them, 59. &c. he recalls Antipater, and subordinates Craterus to him, 61. his grief for Hephæston's death, ibid. 65. &c. he conquers the Cofceans, 62. Alexander enters Babylon, notwithstanding the finiter predictions of the Magi, and other foothsayers, V. 63. he celebrates Hephæston's funeral with extraordinary magnificence, 65. he forms various designs of expeditions and conquests, 69. he sets people at work upon repairing the banks of the Euphrates, 70. and rebuilding the temple of Belus, 71. he abandons himself to excessive drinking, which occasions his death, 73. 74. &c. the pomp of his funeral, 154. his body is carried to Alexandria, 137. judgment to be passed on Alexander, 79. character of that prince, as to merit, &c. and as to defects, 88. &c. Daniel's prophecies concerning Alexander, IV. 452, &c. Alexander, son of Alexander the Great, is elected king, V. 111. Antipater first deprives that prince of the sovereignty, 176. then puts him to death, 208. Alexander, son of Caffander, disputes the crown of Macedonia with his brother Antipater, V. 269. he is killed by Demetrius, whom he had called in to his aid, 270. Alexander I. king of Epirus, marries Cleopatra, daughter of Philip king of Macedonia, IV. 336. Alexander II. son of Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, V. 345. Alexander Bala forms a conspiracy against Demetrius Soter, VI. 476. he ascends the throne of Syria, 478. he marries Cleopatra the daughter of Ptolemy Philometer, ibid. he abandons himself to voluptuousness, 480. Ptolemy declares against him in favour of Demetrius Nicator, 491. Alexander perishes, ibid. Alexander Zebina dethrones Demetrius king of Syria, VI. 514. he is defeated by Antiochus Grypus, and soon after killed, 517. Alexander I. son of Physeon, is placed upon the throne of Egypt, VI. 528. he causes his mother Cleopatra to be put to death, 535. he is expelled by his subjects, and perishes soon after, ibid. 536. Alexander II. son of Alexander I. reigns in Egypt after the death of Lathyrus, VI. 537. he marries Cleopatra, called Hiero- nice, and kills her nineteen days
INDEX.

ALEXANDER. pretended son of Perseus, is driven out of Macedon, where he had usurped the throne, VI. 423

ALEXANDER, son of Anthony and Cleopatra, VII. 275

ALEXANDRA, wife of Alexander Jannaeus, reigns over the Jewish nation, VI. 545; VII. 71, &c. she dies in the ninth year of her reign,

Alexander, city of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, IV. 465. luxury that reigned there, I. 27. its commerce, 25. famous libraries of Alexandria, V. 283, &c. fate of those libraries, 284, 285; VII. 256

Alexandria, built by Alexander the Great upon the Iaxartes, IV. 538

ALEXIS, governor of the citadel of Aphanæa, betrays Epigenes, Antiochus's general, V. 485

Algebra, that science is part of the mathematicks, VII. 95. it ought not to be neglected, 96, 97

ALLOBRGES. Extent of their country, I. 226

Alps. mountains famous for Hannibal's passing them, I. 226

AMASIS, officer of Apries, is proclaimed king of Egypt, I. 95. he is confirmed in the possession of the kingdom by Nabucodonosor, 97. he defeats Apries, who marched against him, takes him prisoner, and puts him to death, ibid. he reigns peaceably in Egypt, 99. his method for acquiring the respect of his subjects, ibid. his death, 101. his body is taken out of his tomb, and burnt by order of Cambyses,

Ambassadors. Fine example of disinterest in certain Roman ambassadors, V. 365

Ambition. There are two sorts of it, II. 45. the Pagans held it a virtue, ALEXANDER Jannæus reigns in Judæa, VII. 4. he attacks the inhabitants of Ptolemæis, VI. 528. Lathyrus marches to the aid of that city, and defeats Alexander near the Jordan, ibid. VII. 4, &c. Alexander's revenge between that prince and the PhariSES, VI. 545. gros affront that he receives at the feast of the tabernacles, VII. 6. vengeance which he takes for it, ibid. civil war between that prince and his subjects, 7. after having terminated it, he abandons himself to feasting, and dies, ibid.

ALEXANDER makes himself tyrant of Phææ, IV. 161. he endeavours to subject the people of Thessaly, ibid. Pelopidas reduces him to reason, ibid. he seizes Pelopidas by treachery, and puts him in prison, 163. Epaminondas obliges him to release his prisoner, 167. he is defeated near Cynocephalus, 168. tragical end of that tyrant, 172. his diversions, 166

ALEXANDER, son of Eropeus, forms a conspiracy against Alexander the Great, IV. 538. he is put to death, ibid.

ALEXANDER, son of Polyphæcon, accepts the general government of Pelopomæus, V. 178. he is killed in Sicily, ibid.

ALEXANDER, governor of Persia for Antiochus the Great, V. 480 he revolts, and makes himself sovereign in his province, ibid. he perishes miserably, 486

ALEXANDER, deputy from the Æolians to the assembly of the allies held at Tempe, VI. 51.

days after, VI. 537. the Alexandrians dethrone him, 545. he dies, and declares at his death the Roman people his heirs, 546. VII. 236
INDEX.

Amenophis, king of Egypt, I. 68. his manner of educating his son Sechoiris, I. 69. this king is the Pharaoth of the Scripture, who was drowned in the Red-sea, 68

Amestris, wife of Xerxes. Barbarous and inhuman revenge of that prince, II. 515, &c.

Amisus, city of Asia, besieged by Lucullus, VII. 185. the engineer Callimachus, who defended it, sets it on fire and burns it, 190

Ammonians, II. 180 famous temple of that people, 187, IV. 463

Amnesty, famous one at Athens, III. 309. occasions when amnesties are necessary, 310

Amorges, bastard of Pissuthnes, revolts against Darius Nothus, III. 244. he is taken and sent into Persia, 245

Amosis, king of Egypt. See Thothmosis.

Amphares, one of the Spartan Ephors, V. 439. his treachery and cruelty to king Agis, ibid. and 441

Amphictyon, king of Athens, II. 283

Amphictyons. Institution of that assembly, II. 283, III. 526. their power, 527. oath taken at their installation, ibid. their condescensions for Philip occasions the diminution of their authority, 528. famous sacred war undertaken by order of this assembly, IV. 270

Amphiapolis, city of Thrace, besieged by Cleon, general of the Athenians, III. 159. Philip takes that city from the Athenians, and declares it free, IV. 257. it is soon after taken possession of by that prince, 260

Amyntas I. king of Macedonia, submits to Darius, II. 402

Amyntas II. king of Macedonia, father of Philip, IV. 250. his death, 252

Amyntas, son of Perdiccas, excluded from the throne of Macedonia, IV. 255

Amyntas, deferter from Alexander's army, seizes the government of Egypt, IV. 462. he is killed there, 463

Amyntas, one of Alexander the Great's officers, IV. 490

Amyrtæus, one of the generals of the Egyptians, who had revolted against Artaxerxes Longimanus, III. 20. he is assailed by the Athenians, 40. he drives the Persians out of Egypt, and is declared king of it, 152. he dies, 153

Amytis, wife of Nabudodonosor, II. 14

Anacharsis, by nation of the Scytho-Nomades, one of the seven sages, II. 358. his contempt for riches, ibid.

Anacreon, Greek poet, II. 352.

Anaitis. Fate of one of the statues of this goddess, VII. 271

Anaxagoras, his care of Pericles, III. 28. his doctrine, 68

Anaxander, king of Lacedæmonia, I. 11

Anaxilaus, tyrant of Zancle, III. 84

Anaximenes, in what manner he saved his country, IV. 376

Andranodorus, guardian of Hieronymus, king of Syracuse, VII. 107. his strange abuse of his authority, 102. after the death of Hieronymus, he seizes part of Syracuse, 166. he forms a conspiracy for ascending the throne, 109. he is accused and put to death, ibid.

Andricus of Adermytium, pretends himself son of Perseus, and is declared king of Macedonia, VI. 420. he defeats the Roman army, commanded by the praetor Juventius, 422. he is twice defeated by Metellus, 423. he is taken, and sent to Rome, VI. 423. he serves to adorn the triumph of Metellus, 437
INDEX.

ANDROCLES, son of Codrus king of Athens, 11. 288
ANDROMACHUS, governor of Syria and Palestine for Alexander, IV. 459, fad end of that governor, ibid.
ANDROMACHUS, father of Achæ-us, is taken and kept prisoner by Ptolemy Evergetes, V. 479: Ptolemy Philopator sets him at liberty, and restores him to his son, 490
ANDRONICUS, general for Antigonus, makes himself matter of Tyre, V. 156. he is besieged in that place by Ptolemy, and forced to surrender, 200
ANDRONICUS, Persius's officer, put to death, and why, VI. 536 ANDRONICUS OF RHODES, to whom the world is indebted for the works of Aristotle, VII. 175
ANDROSTHENES, commander for Philip at Corinth, is defeated by Nicostatus, praefect of the A-cheans, VI. 53
Angels. Opinions of the Pagans concerning them, III. 438 ANICIUS, Roman praetor, is charged with the war against Gentius, king of Illyria, VI. 352. he defeats that prince, takes him prisoner, and sends him to Rome, 353. he receives the honour of a triumph, 386
ANTALCIDES, Lacedæmonian, concludes a shameful peace with the Persians for the Greeks, III.
492, &c.
ANTHONY (Marcus) contributes by his valour to the re-establishment of Auletes upon the throne of Egypt, VII. 246. when triumph, he cites Cleopatra before him, and why, 264. his passion for that princefs, 266. her af-cendant over him, 267. she carries him with her to Alexandria, 268. Anthony returns to Rome, and marries Octavia, Caesar's fitter, 270. he makes some expeditions into Parthia, 271.
then goes to Phœnicia to meet
Cleoipatra, 272. his injurious Treatment of Octavia, ibid. 273.
he makes himself matter of Armenia, and returns to Alexandria, which he enters in triumph, 274. he celebrates there the conoration of Cleopatra, and her children, ibid. open rupture between Caesar and Anthony, 277, 278. the latter repudiates Octavia, 277. Anthony puts to sea, accompanied by Cleopatra, 280.
he is entirely defeated in a sea-fight by Actium, 282. all his troops surrender themselves to Cesar, 283. he returns to Alexandria, ibid. he sends ambadadors to treat of peace with Cesar, 284. seeing himself betrayed by Cleopatra, he sends to challenge Caesar to a single combat. 287. believing Cleopatra had killed herfelf, he falls upon his sword, 288. he expires in Cleopatra's arms, 289. that princefs celebrates his funeral with great magnificence, 291
ANTIGONA, Philotas's miferfs, accuses him to Alexander, IV.
527 ANTIGONA, the daughter of Pro-lem, wife of Pyrrhus, V. 265
Antigonia, city built by Antigonus,
V. 255. and destroyed by Seleucus, 261
ANTIGONUS, one of Alexander's captains, divides the empire of that prince with the reft of them,
V. 112. he makes war against Eumenes, and besieges him in Nora, 147, 148. he marches into Pifidia against Alcetas and Attalus, 149. he becomes very powerful, 153. he revolts againft the Kings, and continues the war with Eumenes, who adhere
Antigonus, nephew of Antigonus, and Philip's favourite, discovers to that prince the innocence of his son Demetrius, and the guilt of Perseus, VI. 231. Philip's intentions in respect to him, 233. he is put to death by order of Perseus, 292

Antigonus, a Macedonian lord in the court of Perseus, V. 349

Antigonus, the brother of Arii-tobulus I. is appointed by his brother to terminate the war in Ituræa, VII. 3. at his return his brother puts him to death, ibid.

Antigonus, son of Ariiobulus II. is sent to Rome by Pompey,
VII. 17. he is set upon the throne of Judæa, 19. he is besieged in Jerusalem, 21. he surrenders, and is put to death, 22

Antimachus, officer in the army
of Perseus, VI. 237

Antioch, city built by Seleucus upon the Orontes, V. 261

Antiochus, lieutenant of Alci-
bades, attacks the Lacedænians with ill conduct, and is defeated with great loss, III. 268

Antiochus I. surnamed Soter,
reigns in Syria, and marries
Stratonice his father's wife, V.
305. he endeavours to seize the kingdom of Pergamum, 371. he is defeated by Eumenes, ibid.
he puts one of his sons to death,
and dies himself soon after, ibid.

Antiochus II. surnamed Theo,
ascends the throne of Syria, V.
371. he delivers Miletus from tyranny, ibid. he carries the war
into Egypt against Ptolemy, 375.
the provinces of the Baal revolt against him, 376. he loses most

INDEX.

hers to them, V. 168 he is defeated by that captain, 183. he gets Eumenes into his hands by treachery, 190. and rids him-selves of him in prison, 191. a league is formed against him, 193. he takes Syria and Phoenicia from Ptolemy, 195. and makes himself master of Tyre, after a long siege, ibid. 196. he marches against Caßander, and gains great advantages over him, 198. he concludes a treaty with the confederate princes, 207.
he puts Cleopatra, Alexander's sister, to death, 210. he forms the design of reestablishing the liberty of Greece, 217, 213. he befieges and takes Athens, ibid.
&c. excessive honours paid him there, 217. he assumes the title of king, 225. he makes preparations to invade Egypt, 226, 227. his enterprise is unsuccessful, ibid. he loses a great battle at Ipsus, and is killed in it, 237

Antigonus Gonatas offers him-selves as an hostage for Demetrius his father, V. 280. he establishes himself in Macedonia, 318.
Pyrrhus drives him out of it, 351. he retires into his maritime cities, ibid. he sends troops to the aid of the Spartans against Pyrrhus, 357. he marches to the assistance of Argos, besieged by that prince, 360. he takes the whole army and camp of Pyrrhus, and celebrates the funereal of that prince with great magnificence, 362. he besieges Athens, 367. and takes it; ibid.
his death, 395

Antigonus Dofon, as Philip's wardian, reigns in Macedonia,
V. 402. the Achæans call him in to their aid against Sparta, 452, 456. he occasions their gaining several advantages, 458, &c. he is victorious in the famous battle of Selæa against Cleomenes, 466. he makes him-selves master of Sparta, and treats it with great clemency, 473. he marches against the Ilyrians, and dies after having gained a victory over them, 474

Antigonus, a Macedonian lord
in the court of Perseus, V. 349

Antigonus, the brother of Ari-tobulus I. is appointed by his brother to terminate the war in Iturœa, VII. 3. at his return his brother puts him to death, ibid.

Antigonus, son of Ariiobulus II. is sent to Rome by Pompey,
VII. 17. he is set upon the
throne of Judæa, 19. he is besieged in Jerusalem, 21. he sur-
renders, and is put to death, 22

Antimachus, officer in the army
of Perseus, VI. 237

Antioch, city built by Seleucus up-
on the Orontes, V. 261

Antiochus, lieutenant of Alci-
bades, attacks the Lacedæ-
nians with ill conduct, and is
defeated with great loss, III. 268

Antiochus I. surnamed Soter,
reigns in Syria, and marries Stratonice his father's wife, V.
305. he endeavours to seize the kingdom of Pergamum, 371. he
is defeated by Eumenes, ibid.
he puts one of his sons to death,
and dies himself soon after, ibid.

Antiochus II. surnamed Theo,
ascends the throne of Syria, V.
371. he delivers Miletus from
tyranny, ibid. he carries the war
into Egypt against Ptolemy, 375.
the provinces of the Baal revolt
against him, 376. he loses most
INDEX.

of those provinces, 377. he makes peace with Ptolemy, and marries Berenice the daughter of that prince, after having repudiated Laodice, ibid. he repudiates Berenice, and takes Laodice again, who cauSES him to be poisoned, 387. Daniel's prophecies concerning him, 378

Antiochus Hierax commands in Asia minor, V. 388. he enters into a league with his brother Seleucus against Ptolemy, 394. he declares war against Seleucus, gives him battle, and defeats him with great danger of his life, 395. he is attacked and defeated by Eumenes, 396. he retires to Ariarathes, who soon after seeks occasion to rid himself of him, 397. he takes refuge with Ptolemy, who imprisons him, 398. he escapes, and is affaillated by robbers, ibid.

Antiochus III. surnamed the Great, begins to reign in Syria, V. 480. fidelity of Achæus in respect to him, ibid. he appoints Hermias his prime minister, ibid. Molon and Alexander, whom he had appointed governors of Media and Persia, revolt against him, ibid. he marries Laodice, the daughter of Mithridates, 482. he sacrifices Epigenes, the most able of his generals, to the jealousy of Hermias, 485, 486. he marches against the rebels, and reduces them, 486. he rids himself of Hermias, 488. he marches into Cæsophyria, and takes Seleucia, 491. Tyre and Ptolemais, 493. he makes a truce with Ptolemy, ibid. the war breaks out again, 494, 495. Antiochus gains many advantages, ibid. he loses a great battle at Raphia, 497. he makes peace with Ptolemy, 499. he turns his arms against Achæus, who had revolted, 499. Achæus is put into his hands by treachery, and executed, 501. expiditions of Antiochus into Media, 592. Parthia, 594. Hyrcania, ibid. Bactria, 595. and even into India, 596. he enters into an alliance with Philip to invade the kingdom of Egypt, VI. 3, 4. and seizes Cæsophyria and Palestine, ibid. he makes war against Attalus, 25. upon the remonstrances of the Romans he retires, ibid. 26. he recovers Cæsophyria, which Aristomenes had taken from him, 27.

Antiochus forms the design of seizing Asia minor, VI. 28. he takes some places there, 61. an embassy is sent to him from the Romans upon that head, 62. Hannibal retires to him, 66. the arrival of that general determines him upon a war with the Romans, 80. he marches against the Ptolemies, and subjects them, 84. he goes to Greece at the request of the Aetolians, 97. he attempts to bring over the Achæans in vain, 99. and afterwards the Boeotians, 102, 103. he makes himself master of Chalcis, and all Euboea, ibid. the Romans declare war against him, ibid. he makes an ill use of Hannibal's counsels, 105. he goes to Chalcis, and marries the daughter of the perfon in whose house he lodges, 106. he seizes the straits of Thermopylae, ibid. he is defeated near those mountains, and escapes to Chalcis, 108. on his return to Ephesus, he ventures a sea-fight, and loses it, 114. his fleet gains some advantage over the Rhodians, 117. he loses a second battle at sea, 118. conduct of Antiochus after this defeat, 120. he makes proposals of peace, 122. which which are rejected, VI. 124. he loses a great battle near Magnesia, 128, &c. he demands peace, 131. and obtains it, on what conditions, 132. In order to pay the tribute to the Romans, he plunders a temple in Elymais, 161, 162. He is killed, ibid. character of Antiochus, ibid. Daniel's prophecies concerning that prince, 163

Antiochus, the eldest son of Antiochus the Great, dies in the flower of his youth, VI. 85, character of that young prince, ibid.

Antiochus IV. surnamed Epiphanes, goes to Rome as an hostage, VI. 133. He afcends the throne of Syria, 239. dispute between that prince and the king of Egypt, 242. He marches against Egypt, 245, and gains a first victory over Ptolemy, ibid. than a second, 247. He makes himself master of Egypt, ibid. and takes the king himself, ibid. upon the rumour of a general revolt, he enters Palestine, 248. besieges and takes Jerusalem, ibid. where he exercites the most horrid cruelties, ibid, 258, &c. Antiochus renews the war in Egypt, 250. He replaces Ptolemy Philometor upon the throne, and with what view, 253. He returns to Syria, ibid. He comes back to Egypt, and marches to Alexandria, 255. Popilius, the Roman ambassador, obliges him to quit it, 256, 257

Antiochus, incensed at what happened in Egypt, vents his rage upon the Jews, VI. 258. He orders Apollonius, one of his generals, to destroy Jerusalem, ibid. cruelties committed there by that general, ibid. 259. Antiochus endeavours to abate the worship of the true God in Jerusalem, 259. He enters Judaea, and commits horrid cruelties, 263, &c. He celebrates games at Daphne near Antioch, 268, 269. Several of his generals defeated by Judas Maccabaeus, ibid. 274, 275, 276. He goes to Persia, attempts to plunder the temple of Elymais, and is shamefully repulsed, ibid. 277. Upon receiving advice of the defeat of his armies in Judea, he sets out instantly with design to extirpate the Jews, ibid. He is struck by the hand of God on his way, and dies in the most exquisite torments, ibid. 278. Daniel's prophecies concerning this prince, 279

Antiochus V. called Eupator, succeeds his father Antiochus Epiphanes in the kingdom of Syria, VI. 458. He continues the war with the Jews, 459. His generals and himself in person are defeated by Judas Maccabaeus, 460, 461. He makes peace with the Jews, and destroys the fortifications of the temple, 463. Romans discontented with Eupator, 470. His soldiers deliver him up to Demetrius, who puts him to death, 471

Antiochus VI. surnamed Theos, is placed upon the throne of Syria by Tryphon, VI. 486, 487. He is assassinated soon after, 489

Antiochus VII. surnamed Sidetes, marries Cleopatra, wife of Demetrius, and is proclaimed king of Syria, VI. 493. He de-thrones Tryphon, who is put to death, 494. He marches into Judea, 505. besieges John Hyrcanus in Jerusalem, ibid. The city capitulates, 506. He turns his arms against Parthia, 507. Where he perishes, 508. Adventure of this prince in hunting, 509

Antio-
INDEX.

Antiochus VIII. surnamed Grypus, begins to reign in Syria, VI. 517. he marries Tryphena, the daughter of Phylus of king of Egypt, ibid. he defeats and expels Zebina, ibid. his mother Cleopatra endeavours to poison him, and is poisoned herself, 518. Antiochus reigns some time in peace, 519, war between that prince and his brother Antiochus of Cyzicum, 520. the two brothers divide the empire of Syria between them, 522. Grypus marries Selena, the daughter of Cleopatra, and revives the war against his brother, 531. he is assassinated by one of his valets, 532.

Antiochus IX. surnamed the Cyzicenian, makes war against his brother Antiochus Grypus, VI. 520. he marries Cleopatra, whom Lathyrus had repudiated, ibid. after several battles he comes to an accommodation with his brother, and divides the empire of Syria with him, 522. he goes to the aid of the Samaritans, and is unsuccessful in that war, 523. after his brother's death he endeavours to poise himself of his dominions, 532. he loses a battle against Seleucus the son of Grypus, who puts him to death, 533.

Antiochus X. surnamed Eufebes, son of Antiochus the Cyzicenian, causes himself to be crowned king of Syria, and expels Seleucus, VI. 533. he gains a battle against Antiochus and Philip, brother of Seleucus, ibid. he marries Selena the widow of Grypus, 534. he is entirely defeated by Philip, and obliged to take refuge amongst the Parthians, ibid. by their aid he returns into Syria, ibid. he is again expelled and retires into Cilicia, where he ends his days, 536.

Antiochus XI. son of Grypus, endeavours to revenge the death of his brother Seleucus, VI. 533. he is defeated by Eusebes, and drowned in endeavouring to pass the Orontes, ibid. &c.

Antiochus XII. surnamed Dionysius, seizes Cælosyria, and reigns some short time, VI. 534.

Antiochus XIII. called Afiaticus, sent by Selena his mother to Rome, VI. 539. on his return he goes to Sicily, and receives an enormous affront from Verres, ibid. he resigns some time in Syria, 544, VII. 226. Pompey deprives him of his dominions, ibid.

Antipas, or Antipater, Herod's father, excites great troubles in Judea, VII. 12, &c. he sends troops to aid Caesar besieged in Alexandria, 260.

Antipater, Alexander's lieutenant, is appointed by that prince to govern Macedonia in his absence, IV. 374. he defeats the Lacedaemonians, who had revolted against Macedonia, 514. Alexander takes his government from him, and orders him to come to him, V. 61. suspicions of Antipater in respect to Alexander's death, 75. Antipater's expeditions into Greece after Alexander's death, 119, 120. he is defeated by the Athenians near Lamia, to which he retires, ibid. he surrenders that place by capitulation, 122. he seizes Athens, and puts a garrison into it, 126. he puts Demosthenes and Hyperides to death, 128. he gives Phila his daughter to Craterus in marriage, 133. he is appointed regent of the kingdom of Macedonia in the room of Perdiccas, 146. death of Antipater, 151.
Antipater, eldest son of Cassander, V. 269; dispute between that prince and his brother Alexander for the crown of Macedonia, ibid. He kills his mo-Theßalonica, who favoured his younger brother, ibid. Demec-trius drives him out of Macedonia, 270. He retires into Thrace, and dies there, ibid.
Antiphon, courtier of Diony-us: Witty saying which cost him his life, IV. 44
Antony. See Anthony.
Anysis, king of Egypt. I. 80
Aornus, a rock in India, besieged and taken by Alexander, V.
10, 11
Apamia, the daughter of Antichus Soter, and widow of Ma-gas, V. 374
Apaturias: Feasts celebrated at Athens, III. 279
Apaturius, officer of Seleucus Ceraunus, forms a conspiracy against that prince, and poisons him, V. 479. He is put to death,
ibid.
Apgea, infernal machine, invented
by Nabis, V. 590
Apelles, courtier of Philip, V.
517. abuses his power, ibid. He endeavours to humble and en-slave the Achæans, 519. He perishes miserably, 536
Apelles, Perseus’s accomplice in accusing Demetrius, is sent ambassador to Rome by Philip, VI. 228. After the death of Demetrius, he escapes into Italy, 232
Apelles, officer of Antiochus Epiphanes, endeavours to make Mattathias sacrifice to idols,
VI. 261. Mattathias kills him with all his followers, 262 Apellicon, Athenian library erected by him at Athens, VII.
174, 175
Apir, ox adored under that name
by the Egyptians, I. 36
Apir, king of Argos, II. 282
Apollo. Temple erected in honour of him at Delphi, I. liii Apollocrates, eldest son of Dionysius the Younger, commands in the citadel of Syracuse in the room of his father, IV. 79. He surrenders that place to Dion, and retires to his fa-
there, 83
Apolloedorus, of Amphipolis, one of Alexander’s officers, IV. 489 Apolloedorus, friend of Cleopatra, favours the entrance of that princes into Alexandria, and in what manner, VII. 254
Apolloedorus, governor of Gaza for Lathyrus, defends that place against Alexander Jannæus, VII.
5. He is assassinated by his brother Lyfimachus, ibid.
Apolloides, officer in the army of Eumenes, occasions the loss of a battle, V. 147. He is seized, and put to death, ibid.
Apolloides, magistrate of Syracuse, VII. 112. His wife discourse in the assembly of the people, 113
Apollo ios, lord of the court of Antiochus Epiphanes, is sent amassador by that prince, first to Egypt, VI. 243. Then to Rome, ibid. Antiochus sends him with an army against Jerualem, with orders to destroy that city, 258. His cruelties there, ibid. 259. He is defeated by Judas Maccabæus, and killed in the battle, 259
Apolloios, governor of Colofria and Phenicia, marches against Jonathan, and is defeated, VI. 480. He forms a plot against the life of Ptolemy Philometor, 48I
Apollophanes, physician of An-tiochus the Great, discovers to that prince the conspiracy formed against him by Hermias, V.
487, 488. Salutary advice which he gave Antiochus, 491

Appius
INDEX.

Appius (Claudius) Roman conful, is sent into Sicily to aid the Mamertines, I. 176, VII. 83. he defeats the Carthaginians and Syracusians, I. 177, VII. 83

Appius (Claudius) Roman senator, prevents the senate from accepting the offers of Pyrrhus, V. 332

Appius (Claudius) Roman, commands a body of troops, and is beat near Ucana, against which he marched with design to plunder it, VI. 327

Apries ascends the throne of Egypt, I. 92. successor of that prince, ibid. Zedekiah king of Judah implores his aid, 93. he declares himself protector of Israel, ibid. Egypt revolts against him, 94. and sets Amasis on the throne, 95. he is obliged to retire into upper Egypt, ibid. Amasis defeats him in a battle, in which he is taken prisoner, and put to death, 97

Aquilius (Manius) Roman pro-consul, is defeated in a battle by Mithridates, who takes him prisoner, and puts him to death, VII. 153

Arabians (Nabuthean:) Character of that people, V. 205

Aracus, Lacedaemonian admiral, III. 282

Aræus, one of the Spartan exiles, is reinitiated by the Achaæans, and carries accusations against them to Rome, VI. 179. the Achaæans condemn him to die, 182. his sentence is annulled by the Romans, 186

Aræus, grandson of Cleomenes, reigns at Sparta, V. 353

Aræus, another king of Sparta, V. 424

Araspes, lord of Media, is appointed by Cyrus to keep Pantea prisoner, II. 99. passion which he conceives for that prince, ibid. goodness of Cyrus in respect to him, 99. he does that prince great service in going as spy amongst the Achaenians, 102, 113

Aratus, son of Clinias, escapes from Sicyon, to avoid the fury of Abantidas, V. 405. he delivers that city from the tyranny, ibid. 406. and unites it with the Achaean league, ibid. he appeases a sedition upon the point of breaking out at Sicyon, 409, &c. he is elected general of the Achaæans, 411. he takes Corinth from Antigonus, 412, &c. he makes several cities enter into the Achaean league, 417, 418. he has not the same success at Argos, 421. he marches against the Etolians, 435. Cleomenes king of Sparta gains several advantages over him, 446. Aratus's envy of that prince, 451. he calls in Antigonus to aid the Achaæans against the Lacedaemonians, 453. he marches against the Etolians, and is defeated near Caphyræ, V. 505, 506. Philip's affection for Aratus, ibid. Apelles, Philip's minister, accuses him falsely to that prince, 520. he is declared innocent, 521. he accompanies Philip into Etolia, his expeditions against the Etolians, Lacedaemonians, and Eleans, 523. Philip cauahes him to be poisoned, 547. his funeral solemnized magnificently, ibid. 548. praise and character of Aratus, 407, 529, 546

Aratus the Younger, son of the great Aratus, is chief magistrate of the Achaæans, V. 515. Philip cauahes him to be poisoned, 548

Arbaces, governor of the Medes for Sardanapalus, revolts against that prince, and founds the kingdom of the Medes, II. 23, 26, 43

Arbaces,
INDEX.

Arbaces, general in the army of Artaxerxes Mnemon against his brother Cyrus, III. 323

Arbela, city of Assyria, famous for Alexander's victory over Darius, IV. 476, 485

Arcesilas, Alexander's lieutenant. Provinces that fell to his lot after that prince's death, V. 113

Archagathus, son of Agathocles, commands in Africa after his father's departure, I. 170. He perishes there miserably, 171

Archelaus, governor of Susa for Alexander, IV. 493

Archelaus, general for Antigonus, marches against Aratus, who besieged Corinth, and is taken prisoner, V. 415, 416. Aratus sets him at liberty, 417

Archelaus, one of the generals of Mithridates, takes Athens, VII. 155. He is driven out of it by Sylla, 161. He is defeated by the fame captain, first at Cheronæa, 165, and then at Orchomenos, 167. He escapes to Chalcis, ibid. And has an interview with Sylla near Delium, 169. Archelaus goes over to Maratra, 176. He engages the latter to make war against Mithridates, ibid.

Archelaus, son of the former, is made high-priest and sovereign of Comana, VII. 73, 230. He marries Berenice, queen of Egypt, 73, 245. He is killed in a battle with the Romans, 246

Archelaus, son of the latter, enjoys the fame dignities as his father, VII. 73. He marries Glaphyra, and has two sons by her, ibid.

Archelaus, second son of Archelaus and Glaphyra, ascends the throne of Cappadocia, VII. 73. Tiberius does him great services with Augustus, 74. He draws the revenge of Tiberius upon himself, 74, 75. He is cited to Rome, and why, ibid. 76. He is very ill received there, ibid. He dies soon after, ibid.

Archias, Corinthian, founder of Syracusa, III. 91, 177

Archias, Theban, is killed by the conspirators at a feast given by Philidas, one of them, to the Beotarchs, IV. 128

Archias, comedian, delivers up the orator Hyperides, and several other persons, to Antigonus, V. 128

Archibius: His attachment to Cleopatra, VII. 294

Archidama, Lacedaemonian lady: Heroick action of her's, V. 354. She is put to death by order of Amphares, 442

Archidamus, king of Sparta, III. 36. He saves the Lacedaemonians from the fury of the Helots, ibid. He commands the troops of Sparta at the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, 101. He besieges Platææ, 122

Archidamus, son of Agestilus, gains a battle against the Aetolians, IV. 156. His valour during the siege of Sparta by Epaminondas, 174. He reigns in Sparta, 197

Archidamus, brother of Agis, escapes from Sparta to avoid the fury of Leonidas, V. 443. Cleomenes recalls him, 446. He is assassinated in returning home, 447

Archidamus, ambassador of the Aetolians, endeavours to engage the Achæans to declare for Antiochus, VI. 100

Archilochus, Greek poet, inventor of iambick verses, II. 347. Character of his poetry, ibid.

Archimedes, famous geometerian, VII. 94. He invents many machines machines of war, VII. 95. prodigous effects of those machines, 120, 121. he is killed at the taking of Syracuse, 132. his tomb discovered by Cicero, 133
ARCHIMEDES, Athenian poet, VII. 99
ARCHON, one of Alexander's officers. Provinces that fell to him after that prince's death, V. 113
ARCHON is elected chief magistrate of the Achæans, VI. 328. wife resolution which he makes that people take, 330, 331
ARCHONS instituted at Athens, II. 284, 319, III. 521. their function, ibid
ARDYS, king of Lydia, II. 60
Areopagus: Its establishment, II. 283, III. 518. authority of that senate, II. 325, III. 518, &c. Péricles weakens its authority, 520
ARETAS, king of Arabia Petraea, submits to Pompey, VII. 234
ARETE, daughter of Dionysius the tyrant, first married to her brother Theorides, and afterwards to her uncle Dion, IV. 47. she marries Timocrates, in the beginning of the latter, 69. Dion takes her again, 89. her death, 93
ARETHUSA, fountain famous in fabulous history, III. 198
ARGÆUS is placed by the Athenians upon the throne of Macedonia, IV. 255. is defeated by Philip, 257
The Argelian, a name given the slave who discovered Pausanias's conspiracy, II. 529
Argyństæ: Illes famous for the victory of the Athenians over the Lacedæmonians, III. 273
ARGO, king of Lydia, II. 57
Argos, foundation of that kingdom, II. 281. kings of Argos, 282. war between the Argives and Lacedæmonians, I. cxlii. they refuse to aid the Greeks against the Persians, III. 373. Argos besieged by Pyrrhus, V. 359. Aratus endeavours to bring that city into the Achaean league, 421. but without success, 422. Argos is subjected by the Lacedæmonians, 458. and afterwards by Antigonus, ibid. Argos surrenders to Philocles, one of Philip's generals, VI. 37, 38. the latter puts it again into the hands of Nabis, 42. it throws off the yoke of that tyrant, and reinstates its liberty, 75
ARGUS, king of Argos, II. 282
ARLEIUS, of Alexandria, philosopher; Augustus Caesar's esteem for him, VII. 290
ARLEIUS commands the left wing of Cyrus's army at the battle of Cunaxa, III. 324. he flies upon advice of that prince's death, 328. the Greeks offer him the crown of Persia, 334. he refuses it, 335. and makes a treaty with them, 336
ARIAMNES, Arabian, deceives and betrays Crassus, VII. 35
ARIAMNES, king of Cappadocia, VII. 65
ARIARATHES I. king of Cappadocia, VII. 64
ARIARATHES II. son of the first, reigns over Cappadocia, VII. 64. he is defeated in a battle by Perdiccas, who seizes his dominions, and puts him to death, V. 138, VII. 64
ARIARATHES III. escapes into Armenia after his father's death, VII. 65. he ascends the throne of his ancestors, ibid.
ARIARATHES IV. king of Cappadocia, marries Antiochis, daughter of Antiochus the Great, VI. 83, VII. 65. the Romans lay a great fine upon him for having aided his father-in-law, VI. 101. he sends his son to Rome, and with what view, view, VI. 301. he declares for the Romans against Perseus, 303. death of Ariarathes, 407
Ariarathes VI. goes to Rome, and why, VI. 301. he refuses to reign during his father's life, 407, VII. 56. after his father's death he ascends the throne of Cappadocia, ibid. he renews the alliance with the Romans, ibid. he is dethroned by Demetrius, ibid. VII. 67. he implores aid of the Romans, ibid. Attalus re-establishtes him upon the throne, ibid. he enters into a confederacy against Demetrius, 68. he marches to aid the Romans against Ariittonicus, and is killed in that war, ibid.
Ariarathes VII. reigns in Cappadocia, VII. 68. his brother-in-law Mithridates caueth him to be assassinated, ibid.
Ariarathes VIII. is placed upon the throne of Cappadocia by Mithridates, VII. 69. he is assassinated by that prince, ibid.
Ariarathes IX. king of Cappadocia, is defeated by Mithridates, and driven out of his kingdom, VII. 69, 147
Ariarathes X. ascends the throne of Cappadocia, VII. 73. Sinna disputes the possession of it with him, and carries it against him, ibid. Ariarathes reigns a second time in Cappadocia, ibid.
Ariarathes, son of Mithridates, reigns in Cappadocia, VII. 69, 147. he is dethroned by the Romans, ibid, he is reinstated a second and then a third time, 69, 149, 150
Ariaspes, son of Artaxerxes Mnemon, deceived by his brother Ochus, kills himself, IV. 200
Aridæus, bastard brother of Alexander, is declared king of Macedonia after the death of that prince, V. 78, 110. Olympias caueth him to be put to death, 173
Arimanius, divinity adored in Persia, II. 249
Arimazus, Sogdian, governor of Petra Oxiana, refuses to surrender to Alexander, IV. 548. he is besieged in that place, 549. he submits to Alexander, who puts him to death, 551
Ariobarzanes, satrap of Phrygia under Artaxerxes Mnemon, ascends the throne of Pontus, I. clxiii. he revolts against that prince, IV. 197
Ariobarzanes I. is placed upon the throne of Cappadocia by the Romans, VII. 70. he is twice dethroned by Tigranes, ibid. Pompey reinstates him in the quiet possession of the throne, ibid.
Ariobarzanes II. ascends the throne of Cappadocia, and is killed soon after, VII. 70, 71
Ariobarzanes III. reigns in Cappadocia, VII. 71. Cicero suppresses a conspiracy forming against him, ibid. he sides with Pompey against Caesar, 72. the latter lays him under contribution, ibid. he refuses to ally with Caesar's murderers, 73. Cassius attacks him, and having taken him prisoner, puts him to death, ibid.
Ariobarzanes, governor of Persia for Darius, pofts himself at the pas of Sufa, to prevent Alexander from passing it, IV. 497. he is put to flight, 498
Aristagoras is establisht governor of Miletus by Hydæus, II. 401. he joins the Ionians in their revolt against Darius, 404, 406. he goes to Lacedæmon for aid, 407. but ineffectively, 408. he goes to Athens, ibid. that city grants him some troops, 409. he is defeated and killed in battle, 412
Aris-
INDEX.

Aristander, a footslayer in the train of Alexander, IV. 481
Aristazanes, officer in the court of Ochus, IV. 223
Aristeas, citizen of Argos, gives Pyrhus entrance into that city, V. 359, 360
Aristæus, chief magistrate of the Achaians, engages them to declare for the Romans against Philip, VI. 32, &c.
Aristides, one of the generals of the Athenian army at Marathon, resigns the command to Miltiades, II. 416. he distinguishes himself in the battle, 429. he is banished, 435. he is recalled, 467. he goes to Themistocles at Salamin, and persuades him to fight in that strait, 487. he rejects the offers of Mardonius, 497. and gains a famous victory over that general at Plataeæ, 501, &c. he terminates a difference that had arose between the Athenians and Lacedæmonians, 506. confidence of the Athenians in Aristides, 525. his confederacy for that people, ibid. he is placed at the head of the troops sent by Athens to deliver the Greeks from the Perian yoke, ibid. his conduct in that war, 527. he is charged with the administration of the publick revenues, 534. his death, 539. his character, 540. his justice, 435, 494, 523. his disinterestedness, 430, 532. his love of poverty, 537
Aristides, painter, great earner for his works, VI. 433
Aristion usurps the government at Athens, and acts with great cruelty, VII. 155. he is besieged in that city by Sulla, 156. he is taken, and put to death, 161
Aristippus, philosopher, his desire to hear Socrates, III. 443 Aristippus, citizen of Argos, Vol. VII.

excites a sedition in that city, V. 358. he becomes tyrant of it, 421. he is killed in a battle, 422. continual terror in which that tyrant lived, 421, &c.
Aristobulus I. son of John Hyrcanus, succeeds his father in the high-priesthood, and sovereignty of Judea, VII. 2. he assumes the title of king, ibid. he causes his mother to be put to death, ibid. then his brother Antigonus, ibid. he dies soon after himself, 4
Aristocracy, form of government, II. 286, 557
Aristocrates commands the left wing of the Athenians at the battle of Arginusæ, III. 274
Aristodemus, chief of the Hecrildæ, poises himself of Peloponnesus, II. 288
Aristodemus, guardian of Agesipolis king of Sparta, III. 393
Aristodemus of Mileus is left at Athens by Demetrius, V. 214
Aristogenes, one of the generals of the Athenians at the battle of Arginusæ, III. 274
Aristogiton conspires against the tyrants of Athens, II. 337. his death, ibid. statues erected in honour to him by the Athenians, 339
Aristomache, sister of Dion, is married to Dionysius the Tyrant, IV. 22
Aristomachus, tyrant of Argos, V. 421. his death, ibid.
Aristomenes, Maccabian, offers his daughter to be sacrificed for appeasing the wrath of the gods,
INDEX.

Aristotle, Philip charges him with the education of Alexander, IV. 263, 354. his application in forming that prince, 355. suspicions of him in respect to the death of Alexander, V. 75, fate of his works, VII. 174

Armenes, son of Nabis, goes an hostage to Rome, VI. 79

Armenia, province of Asia, I. xxx. it was governed by kings, clxv, II. 84, VII. 149

Arms, those used by the ancients, II. 221

Arphaxad, name given by the Scripture to Phraortes. See Phraortes.

Arrichion, Pancratiafs: Combat of that Athleta, I. lxxvi

Arsaces, son of Darius. See Artaxerxes Mnemon.

Arsaces I. governor of Parthia for Antiochus, revolts against that prince, VI. 376. he assumes the title of king, 399, VII. 25

Arsaces II. king of Parthia, takes Media from Antiochus, V. 592, he sustains a war against that prince, 593, VII. 25. he comes to an accommodation with Antiochus, who leaves him in peaceable possession of his kingdom, V. 594, VII. 25

Arsaces, natural son of Artaxerxes Mnemon, is assassinated by his brother Ochus, IV. 200

Arses reigns in Persia after the death of Ochus, IV. 233. Bagoas caufes him to be assassinated, ibid.

Arsinoe, daughter of Ptolemy Lagus, is married to Lyfina-chus, king of Thrace, V. 262. after the death of that prince her brother Ceraunus marries her, 310. fatal sequel of that marriage, 311. she is banished into Samothracia, ibid.

Arsinoe, another daughter of Ptolemy Lagus, marries her brother Ptolemy Philadelphus, V.
INDEX:

V. 368. death of that princess, 381

Arsinoe, sister and wife of Ptolemy Philometor, V. 496. her death, 503

Arsinoe, daughter of Ptolemy Auletes: Caesar's sentence in her favour, VII. 255. she is proclaimed queen of Egypt, 257. Caesar carries her to Rome, and makes her serve as an ornament in his triumph, 262.

Anthony, at the request of Cleopatra, causes her to be put to death, 266

Arsinoe, wife of Magas. See Apamia.

Arsites, satrap of Phrygia, occasions the defeat of the Persians at the Granicus, IV. 377. he kills himself through despair, 381

Art. See Artus.

Artabanus, uncle of Phraates, causes himself to be crowned king of Parthia, and is killed soon after, VI. 511, VII. 26

Artabanus, brother of Darius, endeavours to divert that prince from his enterprise against the Scythians, II. 391. he is made arbiter between the two sons of Darius in respect to the sovereignty, 439. his wife discourses to Xerxes upon that prince's design to attack Greece, 444. &c.

Artabanus, Hyrcanian, captain of the guards to Xerxes, conspires against that prince, and kills him, II. 542. he is killed himself by Artaxerxes, 543

Artabarzanes, after the death of Darius, disputes the throne of Persia with Xerxes, II. 439. he continues in amity with his brother, and loses his life in his service at the battle of Salamis, 440. he was the first that reigned in Pontus, VII. 147

Artabarzanes, king of Atropatene, submits to Antiochus, V. 487

Artabazus, Persian lord, officer in the army of Mardonius, II. 502. his counsel to that general, ibid. he escapes into Asia after the battle of Plataea, 505.

Xerxes gives him the command of the coasts of Asia minor, and with what view, 526. he reduces the Egyptians that had revolted against Artaxerxes, III. 20

Artabazus, governor of one of the provinces of Asia for Ochus, revolts against that prince, IV. 206. supported by Chares the Athenian, he gains several advantages, ibid. he is overpowered and retires into Macedonia, 207.

Ochus receives him again into favour, 230, &c. his fidelity to Darius, 506. Alexander makes him governor of Petra Oxiana, 521

Artagerises, officer of Artaxerxes Mnemon, is killed in the battle of Cunaxa, III. 317

Artainta, niece of Xerxes, II. 515. violent passion of that prince for her, 516. fatal sequel of that passion, 517

Artaphernes, governor of Sardis for his brother Darius, is for compelling the Athenians to reinstate Hippias, II. 342.

he marches against the island of Naxos with design to surprize it, II. 405. he is besieged in Sardis by the Athenians, 409, 410. he discovers the conspiracy of Hyphasis, 412. he marches against the revolted Ionians, 413

Artaphernes, ambassador of Artaxerxes to the Lacedaemonians, III 146

Artarius, brother of Artaxerxes Longimanus, III. 22

Artavasdes, king of Armenia, VII. 27

Artaxerxes I. surnamed Longimanus, by the instigation of D c 2

Art-
INDEX.

Artabanus, kills his brother Darius, and ascends the throne of Persia, II. 542. He rids himself of Artabanus, ibid. He destroys the party of Artabanus, III. 2. and that of Hylas, his elder brother, ibid. He gives Themistocles refuge, 5. His joy for the arrival of that Athenian, ibid. He permits Eldras to return to Jerusalem first, 24. And then Nehemiah, 25. Alarmed by the conquests of the Athenians, he forms the design of sending Themistocles into Attica at the head of an army, 16. Egypt revolts against him, 19. He reduces it to return to its obedience, 21. He gives up Inaros to his mother contrary to the faith of treaty, 22. He concludes a treaty with the Greeks, 41. He dies, 447.

Artaxerxes II, surnamed Mardon, is crowned king of Persia, III. 295. Cyrus his brother attempts to murder him, 297. He sends him to his government of Asia minor, ibid. He marches against Cyrus advancing to des- throne him, 322. Gives him battle at Cunaxa, 333. And kills him with his own hand, 327. He cannot force the Greeks in his brother's army to surrender themselves to him, 334. He puts Tissaphernes to death, 383. He concludes a treaty with the Greeks, 402. He attacks Evagoras king of Cyprus, 407, &c. He judges the affair of Teribazus, 417. His expedition against the Caduans, 419, &c.

Artaxerxes sends an ambassa- dor into Greece to reconcile the states, IV. 154. He receives a deputation from the Greeks, 155. Honours which he pays to Pelopidas, 157. He undertakes to reduce Egypt, 189. That enterprise miscarries, 191. He medicates a second attempt against Egypt, 193. Most of the provinces of his empire revolt against him, 197. Troubles at the court of Artaxerxes concerning his successor, 199. Death of that prince, 200.

Artaxerxes III. before called Ochus. See Ochus.

Artaxias, king of Armenia, VI. 270. VII. 149.

Artedomedorus, invested with the supreme authority at Syracuse, VII. 80.

Artemisia, queen of Halicarnassus, supplies Xerxes with troops in his expedition against Greece, II. 462. Her courage in the battle of Salamis, 488.

Artemisia, wife of Mausolus, reigns in Caria after the death of her husband, IV. 219. Honours she renders to the memory of Mausolus, ibid. She takes Rhodes, 220. Her death, 222.

Artemisa, promontory of Euboea, famous for the victory of the Greeks over the Persians, II. 478.

Artemon, Syrian. Part that queen Laodice makes him play, V. 387, &c.

Artemon, engineer. III. 57.

Artaxares, enuch of Darius Notus, forms a conspiracy against that prince, III. 152. He is put to death, ibid.

Artis, origin and progress of the arts, II. 234. Arts banished from Sparta by Lycurgus, 316. And placed in honour at Athens by Solon, 329.

Artabrius, son of Megabyius, revolted against Ochus, III. 149. He is suffocated in ashes, 150.

Artemis. See Augustus.

Arybas, king of Epirus, IV. 299, l. clxvi.

Asa, king of Judah, defeats the army of Zara king of Ethiopia, l. 80.

Aœdrus-
INDEX.

A•srubal, Hamilcar's son-in-law, commands the Carthaginian army in Spain, I. 213. he builds Carthagena, ibid, he is killed treacherously by a Gaul, 214

As•srubal, surnamed Calvus, is made prisoner in Sardinia by the Romans, I. 257

As•srubal, Hannibal's brother, commands the troops of Spain after his brother's departure, I. 225. he receives orders from Carthage to march to Italy to the aid of his brother, 262. he sets forward and is defeated, 264. he loses a great battle near the river Metaurus, and is killed in it, 265

As•srubal, Gisgo's brother, commands the Carthaginian troops in Spain, I. 266

As•srubal, surnamed Hæbus, is sent by the Carthaginians to Rome to demand peace, I. 274

As•srubal, Mairinisia's grandson, commands in Carthage, during the siege of that city by Scipio, I. 311. another Adrubal causes him to be put to death, 317

As•srubal, Carthaginian general, is condemned to die; and wherefore, I. 302, the Carthaginians appoint him general of the troops without their walls, 311. he causes another A•srubal who commands within the city to be put to death, 317. his cruelty to the Roman prisoners, ibid. after the taking of the city, he intrenches himself in the temple of A•sculapius, 321. he surrenders himself to Scipio, ibid. tragical end of his wife and children, 322

A•thes: Smothering in asphes a punishment amongst the Persians, III. 150

A•sh, geographical description of it, I. xxx, &c. it is considered as the cradle of the sciences, II. 236

As•monian race: Duration of their reign in Judæa, VII. 21

As•spasia, celebrated courtesan, III. 57. she marries Pericles, 67. acculation formed against her at Athens, ibid. her great knowledge occasions her being ranked amongst the sophists, ibid.

As•peck, serpent whose bite is mortal, V. 302, VII. 285

As•pis, governor for Artaxerxes in the neighbourhood of Cappadocia, revolts against that prince, III. 424. he is punished soon after, ibid.

Assur, son of Shem, who gave his name to A•lyria, II. 5

A•lyria, origin of its name, II. 5

A•ssyrians. First empire of the A•ssyrians, II. 4. duration of that empire, ibid. kings of the A•ssyrians, 2, &c. second empire of the A•ssyrians, both of Nineveh and Babylon, 26. subversion of that empire by Cyrus, 127

A•ster, of Amphipolis, shoots out Philip's right eye, IV. 273. that prince puts him to death, ibid.

A•strology, Judicial, falsity of that science, II. 243, &c.

A•stronomy. Nations that applied themselves first to it, I. 49, II. 242

A•stycges, king of the Medes, called in Scripture A•hafuerus, II. 56. he gives his daughter in marriage to Cambyses king of Persia, ibid. he caues Cyrus his grandson to come to his court, 74

A•stymedes, deputed to Rome by the Rhodians, endeavours to appeale the anger of the senate, VI. 391

A•syris, king of Egypt, author of the law concerning loans, I. 79. famous pyramid built by his order, ibid.

D d 3

A•theas.
INDEX.

Athæas, king of Scythia, is defeated by Philip, against whom he had declared, IV. 315

Athenæus, general of Antigonus, is sent by that prince against the Nabathean Arabians, V. 205. he perishes in that expedition, ibid.

Athenæis, daughter of Leontius. See Eudocia.

Athenæus, brother of Eumenes, is sent ambassador by that prince to Rome, VI. 201

Athenæus, governor for Antiochus in Judæa and Samaria, to establish that prince's religion in them, VI. 260

Athenæa, or Panathenæa, feasts celebrated at Athens, I. xxxvi

Athénion, courtier of Ptolemy Evergetes, goes to Jerusalem by order of that prince, V. 400

Athens. Athenians. Foundation of the kingdom of Athens, I. 74, II. 283. kings of Athens, II. ibid. the archons succeed them, 284, 319. Draco is chose legislator, ibid. then Solon, 322. Pisistratus, tyrant of Athens, 332, &c. the Athenians recover their liberty, 339. Hippias attempts in vain to re-establish the tyranny, 341. the Athenians, in conjunction with the Ionians, burn the city of Sardis, 410. Darius prepares to avenge that insult, ibid. famous Athenian captains at that time, 416. Darius's heralds are put to death there, 423. the Athenians under Miltiades gain a famous victory over the Persians at Marathon, 424. moderate reward granted Miltiades, 433

The Athenians, attacked by Xerxes, chuse Themistocles general, II. 465. they resign the honour of commanding the fleet to the Lacedæmonians, 470. they contribute very much to the victory gained at Artemisium, 479. they are reduced to abandon their city, 481. Athens is burnt by the Persians, 484. battle of Salamin, in which the Athenians acquire infinite glory, ibid. they abandon their city a second time, 499. the Athenians and Lacedæmonians cut the Persian army 10 pieces near Platææ, 505. they defeat the Persian fleet at the same time near Mycale, 513. they rebuild the walls of their city, 518. the command of the Greeks in general transferred to the Athenians, 525

The Athenians, under Cimon, gain a double victory over the Persians near the river Eurymedon, III. 14. they support the Egyptians in their revolt against Persia, 19. their considerable losses in that war, 21. seeds of division between Athens and Sparta, 58. peace re-established between the two states, 39. the Athenians gain several victories over the Persians, which obliges Artaxerxes to conclude a peace highly glorious for the Greeks, 40. &c. jealousy and differences between Athens and Sparta, 53. treaty of peace for thirty years between the two states, 56. the Athenians besiege Samos, 57. they send aid to the Corcyrians, ibid. they besiege Potidæa, 60. open rupture between Athens and Sparta, 66. beginning of the Peloponnesian war, 99. reciprocal ravages of Attica and Peloponnesus, 104

Plague of Athens, III. 105. The Athenians seize Potidæa, 117. they send forces against the isle of Lesbos, 125. and make themselves masters of Mitylene, 131. the plague breaks out again at Athens, 138. the Athenians take Pylos, 139. and are besieged in it,
The command is taken from Alcibiades, 269. they gain a great victory over the Lacedaemonians near the Arginusae, 273. they are entirely defeated by the latter near Agosbotamos, 287. Athens, besieged by Lyfander, capitulates, and surrenders, 289. Thirty tyrants instituted to govern Athens, by Lyfander, III. 201. she recovers her liberty, 308. &c. she enters into the league formed against the Lacedaemonians, 390. Conon rebuilds the walls of Athens, 402. the Athenians aid the Theban exiles, IV. 125. they repeat it presently after, 154. they renew the alliance with the Thebans, 156. they declare against the latter for the Lacedaemonians, 155. many of the Athenian allies revolt, 207. generals employed to reduce them, ibid. &c. alarm of the Athenians, occasioned by the preparations for war made by the king of Perse, 213. they send aid to the Megalopolitans, 218. and afterwards to the Rhodians, 221. The Athenians suffer themselves to be amused by Philip, IV. 259. Demoisthenes endeavours in vain to rouse them from their lethargy, 277, 280, 292. Athens joins the Lacedaemonians against Philip, 301. the Athenians under Phocion drive Philip out of Euboea, 305. &c. they oblige that prince to raise the siege of Perinthus and Byzantium, 313. they form a league with the Thebans against Philip, 322. immoderate joy of Athens upon that prince's death, 331. 339. the Athenians form a league against Alexander, 352. that prince pardons them, 308. conduct of the Athenians in respect to Harpalus, V. 55. Rumours and joy at Athens.
upon the news of Alexander's death, V. 117. the Athenians march against Antipater, 119. they are victorious at first, 120. and are afterwards reduced to submit, 125. Antipater makes himself master of their city, 126. Phocion is condemned to die by the Athenians, 156. Caius Alexander takes Athens, 163. he makes choice of Demetrius Phalieres to govern the republic, ibid. Athens taken by Demetrius Poliorcetes, 214. excessive honours rendered to Antigonus and his son Demetrius by the Athenians, 217. Athens besieged by Caius Alexander and delivered by Demetrius, 252. excessive flattery of Demetrius by the Athenians, 253. Athens shunts its gates against Demetrius, 262. he takes that city, 267. Athens declares against Antigonus Gonatas, 367. and is taken by that prince, who puts a garrison into it, ibid.

The Athenians carry their complaints against Philip to Rome, VI. 12. that prince besieges their city, 15. decrees of Athens against Philip, 23. she sends three famous philosophers upon an embassy to Rome, and wherefore, 411. 412. Athens taken by Archelaus, VII. 155. Areion makes himself tyrant of that city, ibid. his cruelties there, ibid. it is besieged and retaken by Sylla, 156. &c.

Government of Athens, III. 508. foundation of the government instituted by Solon, II. 321. abuses introduced into the government by Pericles, V. 100. inhabitants of Athens, III. 512. senate, 516. Areopagus, 518. magistrates, 521. assemblies of the people, 522. other tribunals, 524. revenues of Athens, 529. education of youth, 530. different species of troops, of which the armies of Athens were composed, 542. choice of the generals, IV. 343. raising of troops, their pay, 551. navy, 546. ships, 547. naval troops, 551. equipment of galleys at Athens, 241. exemptions and honours granted by that city to those who had rendered it great services, 245. orations pronounced by order of the state in honour of those who had died for their country, III. 57, 108, IV. 331. of religion, I. xxxiii. feasts of the Panathenaea, xxxvi. Bacchus, xxxix. and Eleusis, xli.

Peculiar character of the people of Athens, III. 553. easily enraged, and soon appeased, 58, 132, 280, 480. sometimes ungrateful to their generals, and those who had served them best, II. 434, 436, 531, III. 269, V. 187, 218. humane to their enemies, III. 309. delicate in respect to polite and decorum, 556, V. 57. great in their projects, III. 175. zealous for liberty, II. 423, 497. table of the Athenians for the arts and sciences, III. 556. their passion for the representations of the theatre, I. xcvi, cxxv. common character of the Athenians and Lacedaemonians, III. 559

Athletæ. Etymology of the word, I. lxix. exercises of the Athletæ, lxx. trial through which they passed before they fought, ibid. rewards granted to them when victorious, Ixxvii. II. 332

Athletæ, their function, I. lxxi

Arbo, famous mountain of Macedon, II. 451, V. 67

Attic, wife of Artaxerxes Mene- mon, IV. 199

Attic, daughter of Cyrus, and wife of Cambyses first, and after of
INDEX.

of Smerdis the Magus, II. 191.

she is at last married to Darius, 366. Democedes cures her of a dangerous distemper, 372. she persuades Darius to send him into Greece, and why, 373. she is called Vatlii in Scripture, 377

Atreus, son of Pelops king of Mycenæ, II. 283

Atropates, one of Alexander's generals: Provinces which fell to him after that prince's death, V. 113. he causes himself to be declared king of them, 147

Attalus I. king of Pergamus, V. 596. war between that prince and Seleucus, 479, 480, 489. Attalus joins the Romans in the war against Philip, 552, 554, 567. he gains several advantages over that prince, VI. 4, 5. he dies, 42. his magnificent edifice of his riches, 43

Attalus II. furnamed Philadelphia, prevails upon the Achæans to revoke their decrees against his brother, VI. 329. he comes ambassador to Rome, 387. he reigns in Cappadocia as guardian to Attalus his nephew, 407, 408. war between Attalus and Prusias, 409. death of Attalus, 500

Attalus III. furnamed Philometor, goes to Rome, and why, VI. 410. he ascends the throne of Cappadocia, after the death of his uncle, and causes him to be much regretted by his vices, 500. he dies, and by his will leaves his dominions to the Roman people, 501

Attalus, Syracusan, discovers the intelligence held by Marcellus in Syracuse to Epipides, VII. 124

Attalus, Philip's lieutenant, is sent by that prince into Asia minor, IV. 334. marriage of his niece Cleopatra with Philip, 335. Alexander's quarrel with Attalus in the midst of the feast, ibid. Alexander causes him to be affianced, 364

Attica, divided by Cecrops into twelve cantons, II. 283. See Athens

Atypadæ, descendants of Atys, II. 57

Atys, son of Cresus; good qualities of that prince, II. 67. his death, ibid.

Augustus: Puerilities of that science, I. xlviii

Augustus. See Caesar Augustus

Aura, name of Phidolas's mare, I. xc

Autophrdates, governor of Lydia for Artaxerxes Mnaemon, is charged by that prince with the war against Datames, III. 426. he is defeated, ibid. and retires into his government, 427. he joins with the provinces of Asia in their revolt against Artaxerxes, IV. 197

Axiochus, Athenian, takes upon him the defence of the generals condemned to die after the battle of Arginonæ, III. 281

Axithea, wife of Nicocles, kills herself, V. 199

Azarias, one of the three Hebrews miraculously preferred in the midst of the flames, II. 38

Azorax, a city of Palæstine, I. 86

B.

Baal. See Bel

Babel, description of that tower, II. 14

Babylon, Babylonia; foundation of the city of Babylon, II. 2. description of that city, 9. kings of Babylon, 26. duration of its empire, 43, 140. siege and taking of that city by Cyrus, 137. it revolts against Darius, II. 378. that prince reduces it to obedience, 381.

Alex-
INDEX.

Alexander makes himself master of Babylon, IV. 488. destruction of Babylon foretold in several parts of the Scripture, II. 128. curse pronounced against that city, 141. eagerness of princes to destroy it, 142. the Babylonians laid the first foundations of astronomy, 242

Bacchidas, eunuch of Mithridates, VII. 138

Bacchis, governor of Mesopotamia under Antiochus Epiphanes and Demetrius Soter, is defeated in many engagements by Judas Maccabæus, VI. 471, &c.

Bacchus, whose descendants reigned at Corinth, II. 286

Bacchus, feasts instituted at Athens in honour of him, I. xxxix

Bacchylides, Greek poet, III. 84

Bañírana, province of upper Asia, I. xxx

Báctica, part of old Spain, I. 137

Bagoas, eunuch of Ochus, commands a detachment during that prince's expedition against Egypt, IV. 228. he poisons Ochus, 232. he places Arses upon the throne of Persia, 233. he caueth that prince to be put to death, and places Darius Coidomanaus upon the throne in his stead, ibid. he falls into the hands of Alexander, IV. 519. he gains the ascendant of that prince, ibid. by his intrigues he caueth Orsines to be put to death, V. 50, &c.

Bagophanes, governor of the citadel of Babylon, surrenders to Alexander, IV. 489

Bagorazus, Artaxerxes's eunuch, is put to death by order of Xerxes, III. 148

Bala. See Alexander Bala

Baleares, islands: why so called, I. 136

Balthazar, or Belshazzar, king of Babylon, called also

Labytint, or Nabonid, II. 42. he is besieged in Babylon by Cyrus, 137. he gives a great feast to his whole court the same night that city is taken, ibid. he is killed in his palace, 140. his death foretold in Scripture, 136, 137

Barca. See Hamilcar, surnamed Barca

Barsina, wife of Alexander, V. 114. Polyperchon puts her to death, 208

Bafket. Procession of the ballet at Athens, I. xiv

Bafiards: Law of Athens against them, III. 118

Bassarines, people of Sarmatia in Europe; their character, VI. 292

Battalion, sacred, of the Thebans, IV. 138

Battle and Combats celebrated in ancient history. Near the coasts of Myle, I. 179. near Ecnome, 180. of Tucinius, 231. of Trebia, 234. of Thraeymenus, 239. of Cannæ, 248. of Zama, 272. of Thermopylae, II. 210. of Marathon, 424. of Thermopylae, 470. of Artemisium, 478. of Salamin, 484. of Plateæ, 496. of Mycale, 513. of the river Eurymedon, III. 14. of Arginnae, 273. of Ægolopotamos, 284. of Cunaxa, 323. of Leuctra, IV. 143. of Mantinæa, 175, &c. of Chersonæa, 325. of the Granicus, 379. of Issus, 400. of Arbela, 481. of the Hydaspes, V. 14. Issus, 349. of Seleàna, 466. of Raphia, 496. of Caphyia, 506. of Elis, 555, &c. of Òctolophos, VI. 20. of Cyneceephale, 45. of Thermopylae, 107. of mount Corythus, 114. of Elea, 117. of Myoneus, 120. of Magnesia, 126. of Emmaus, 272. of Bethesda, 276. of the river Peneus, 316. of Pydna, 359. of Leucnopetra,
INDEX.

copetra, VI 430. of Carrae, VII. 38. of Cabirae, 187. of Aramania, 208. of Actium, 281

Bee, name given Sophocles, I. civ, cvii

Bel, divinity adored by the Ayclicans; temple erected in honour of him, II. 14

Belesis, king of Babylon. See Nabonassar.

Belgium, at the head of the Gauls, makes an irruption into Macedonia, V. 311. he defeats Ceraunus, and is defeated himself, 312

Belus, name given Amenophis, I. 68. and to Nimrod, II. 2

Belus the Ayclican, II. 2

Berenice, wife of Ptolemy Soter, V. 266. ascendant of that prince over her husband, ibid. 281, 282, 287

Berenice, daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus, marries Antiochus Theos, V. 380. Antiochus repudiates her, 387. Laodice causes her to be put to death, 388

Berenice, wife of Ptolemy Euergetes, V. 391. Ptolemy Philopator causes her to be put to death, 492. Berenice's hair, 391

Berenice, daughter of Ptolemy Lathyrus. See Cleopatra.

Berenice, daughter of Ptolemy Auletes, reigns in Egypt during her father's absence, VII. 238. she marries Se'ecus Cybiosafles, and then causes him to be put to death, 245. she marries Arche- laus, ibid. Ptolemy puts her to death, 247

Berenice, wife of Mithridates, VII. 168. unhappy death of that prince, 189

Perosus, historian, V. 572

Bessus, chief of the Bactrians, betrays Darius, and puts him in chains, IV. 503, 505. he assassinates that prince, 527. he is seized and delivered up to Alexander, 536. that prince cau hes him to be executed, 547

Bestia (Calpurnius) is sent by the Romans against Jugurtha, I. 341. his conduct in that war, ibid.

Bithulia, city of Israel: Siege of that city by Holophernes, II. 52

Bias, one of the seven sages of Greece, II. 355

Biblius, commander in Etolia for the Romans, VI. 396. his conduct in that province, 397

Biblos, city of Phoenicia, IV. 421

Bibulus (M. Calpurnius) is appointed by the Romans to command in Syria after the defeat of Craflus by the Parthians, VII. 57. his incapacity, ibid.

Bifaltes, people of Thrace: Valiant action of one of their kings, II. 471

Bithynia, province of Asia minor, I. xxxi. kings of Bithynia, cxxii. Mithridates possesses himself of it, VII. 154. it is reduced into a province of the Roman empire, VI. 538, VII. 180

Biron and Cleobis, Argives, models of fraternal friendship, II. 63

Bocchus, king of Mauritania, Jugurtha's father-in-law, I. 344. he delivers up his son to the Romans, ibid.

Boeotia, part of Greece, II. 274. unjust prejudice against that country, IV. 182

Boeotians. See Thebans.

Bzezarch, principal magistrate of Thebes, IV. 128

Borges, governor of Eion for the king of Persia, III. 9. his excess of bravery, 10

Bolis, Cretan: His stratagem and treason to Achæus, V. 500

Bomilcar, Carthaginian general, makes himself tyrant of Carthage, I. 169. he is put to death, 170

Boethius
INDEX.

Bosporus Cimmerian, country subject to Mithridates, VII. 225
Böstar, commander of the Carthaginians in Sardinia, is murdered by the mercenaries, I. 209
Brachmans, Indian philosophers, V. 23. their opinions, employments, and manner of living, 24, 25, &c.
Branchidae, family of Miletus, settled by Xerxes in the upper Asia, and destroyed by Alexander the Great, IV. 535
Brasidas, Lacedaemonian general, distinguishes himself at the siege of Pylos, III. 139. his expeditions into Thrace, 154. he takes Amphipolis, 155. he defends that place against Cleon, and receives a wound of which he dies, 160
Brennus, general of the Gauls, makes an irruption into Pannonia, V. 311. Macedonia, 313. and Greece, 314. he perishes in the late enterprise, 315
Brachion, quarter of the city of Alexandria, VII. 236
Bucephalia, city built by Alexander, IV. 361
Bucephalus, war-horse backed by Alexander, IV. 360. wonders related of that horse, ibid.
Burial of the dead in the earth, II. 257. burial of kings amongst the Scythians, 384. care of the ancients to procure burial for the dead, III. 277
Burning-glass, by the means of which Archimedes is said to have burnt the Roman fleet, VII. 122
Busiris, king of Egypt, I. 65
Busiris, brother of Amenophis, infamous for his cruelty, I. 74
Byblos, city of the isle of Profopitis, III. 20
Byrsa, name of the citadel of Carthage, I. 325
Byssus, an Egyptian plant; its description and use, I. 57
Byzantium, city of Thrace, delivered by the Greeks from the power of the Persians, II. 525, 526. it submits to the Athenians, III. 260. siege of Byzantium by Philip, IV. 309. war between the Byzantines and Rhodians, V. 490

C.

Abiræ, city of Asia, famous for Lucullus's victory over Mithridates, VII. 187
Cadiz, city of Spain, I. 138
Cadmus, Phoenician, seizes Boatia, and builds Thebes there, II. 284. it was he that introduced the use of letters in Greece, I. 75
Cadufians, people of Assyria: They submit to Cyrus, II. 103. revolt of the Cadufians against Artaxerxes, III. 419. Tiberiusz makes them return to their duty, 420
Caesities, name given to the city of Jerusalem by Herodotus, I. 90
Caesius, Urania or the moon, goddess of the Carthaginians, I. 105

Caesar (Julius) his power at Rome, VII. 214. he restores Ptolemy Aeules, 237. he goes to Egypt in hopes of finding Pompey there, 251. he makes himself judge between Ptolemy and his sister Cleopatra, 253. Caesar's passion for that princess, 254, 261. battles between his troops and the Alexandrians, 256. he gives the crown of Egypt to Cleopatra and Ptolemy, 261. he confirms the Jews in their privileges, 18, 262. he gains a great victory over Pharmaces, and drives him out of the kingdom of Pontus, 262, 263. he is killed soon after, 264

Caesar (Octavian) afterwards surnamed Augustus, joins with Anthony and Lepidus to avenge Caesar's
INDEX.

Caesar's death, VII. 264. he quarrels with Anthony, 273. he gains a great victory over him at the battle of Actium, 281, 282. he goes to Egypt, 285. he besieges Alexandria, 286. interview of Caesar and Cleopatra, 291. he is deceived by that princess, whom he was in hopes of deceiving, 293

Caesar, son of Julius Caesar and Cleopatra, VII. 261. he is proclaimed king of Egypt jointly with his mother, 274

Caius, city of Pontus, taken from Mithridates by Pompey, VII. 227

Caire, its famous castle in Egypt, 1. 4

Calanus, Indian philosopher, comes to the court of Alexander the Great, V. 28. he dies voluntarily upon a funeral pile, 51, &c.

Calcideus, in the name of the Lacedaemonians, concludes a treaty with Tissaphernes, III. 245

Callas, son of Harpalus, officer in Alexander's army, IV. 375

Callias, citizen of Athens, is cited before the judges upon account of Aristides, II. 537. he is appointed plenipotentiary for Athens to Artaxerxes, III. 41

Callibius, Spartan, is appointed governor of the citadel of Athens, III. 291

Callicrates, Spartan, kills Epaminondas in the battle of Mantinea, IV. 178

Callicrates, deputed by the Achaians to Rome, betrays them, VI. 195. he prevents the Achaians from aiding the two brothers Ptolemy, against Antiochus, 254, 255. he impeaches all the Achaians, who had seemed to favour Perseus, to the Romans, 399

Calliocrates succeeds Ly- sander in the command of the Lacedaemonian fleet, III. 270. he goes to the court of Cyrus the Younger, 272. he is defeated near the islands of Arginusae, and killed in the battle, 275, &c.

Callimachus, polemarch at Athens, joins the party of Miltiades, II. 426

Callimachus, governor of Amisus for Mithridates, defends that city against Lucullus, and then sets it on fire, VII. 190

Callippus, Athenian, affinates Dion, and seizes the tyranny of Syracuse, IV. 92, &c. he is soon after affinates himself, ibid. Callisthenes, philosopher in the train of Alexander, V. 562. that prince causes him to be put to death, 564. character of that philosopher, 565

Callixenes, Athenian orator, accuses the Athenian generals falsely in the senate, III. 278. he is punished soon after, 280

Calpurnius Bestia. See Bestia.

Calvinus (Domitius) commands in Asia for Caesar, VII. 256

Calumniators, or False accusers. Punishment of them in Egypt, I. 32. law of Charondas against them, III. 93

Cambylus, general in the service of Antiochus, betrays Acheus, and delivers him up to that prince, V. 500, 501

Cambyses, father of Cyrus, king of Persia, II. 57, 72

Cambyses, son of Cyrus, ascends the throne of Persia, II. 177. he enters Egypt with an army, 178. and makes himself master of it, 179. his rage against the body of Amasis, 180. his expedition against Ethiopia, 181. on his return he plunders the temples of the city of Thebes, II.
INDEX.

II. 182. he kills the god Apis, 183. he puts his brother Smerdis to death, 184. he kills Meroe, his sister and wife, ibid. he prepares to march against Smerdis the Magus, who had usurped the throne, 189. he dies of a wound which he gives himself in the thigh, ibid. character of that prince, 268

Camisaes, Carien, governor of Leuco-Syria, perishes in the expedition of Artaxerxes against the Cadusians, III. 422

Canaanites: Origin of that people, I. 64

Candaules, king of Lydia, II. 57

Candia, island. See Crete

Caridius, Anthony's lieutenant, VIII. 282

Carrae, city of Apulia, famous for Hannibal's victory over the Romans, I. 253

Caphis, Phocæan, Sylla's friend, is sent by that general to DELPHI, to receive the treasures of it, VII. 157. religious terror of Caphis, ibid.

Caphyia, a city of Peloponnesus, known by the defeat of Aratus, V. 506

Cappadocia, province of Asia minor, I. xxxii. kings of Cappadocia, cxiv. VII. 64. it is reduced into a Roman province, 76

Caphni, city of Italy, abandons the Romans, and submits to Hannibal, I. 255. it is besieged by the Romans, 259. the tragical end of its principal inhabitants, 260

Caranus, first king of Macedonlia, II. 286

Carbo; oppressions committed by him at Rome, VII. 169

Cardea, city of the Chersonesus, IV. 297

Caria, province of Asia minor, I. xxxi

Caridemus, of Oaë, is banished Athens, IV. 368. he is persecuted by Alexander, and retires to Darius Codomanus, ibid. his sincerity occasions his death, 396, &c.

Carmania, province of Persia, V. 45

Carmenades, philosopher, his embassy to Rome, VI. 411, 412

Carrae, a city famous for the defeat of Crassus, VII. 46

Carthage. Carthaginians. Foundation of Carthage, I 131. its augmentation, 134. conquests of the Carthaginians in Africa, ibid. in Sardinia, 135. they poltthemselves of the Balearian isles, 136. in Spain, 137. they land in Spain, 138. and in Sicily, 140. first treaty between Rome and Carthage, 141. the Carthaginians make an alliance with Xerxes, 142, II. 451. they are defeated in Sicily by Gelon, I. 143. III. 73. they take several places in Sicily under Hannibal, I. 145, and I. Milicon, 146. they make a treaty with Dionysius, 148. IV. 14. war between the Carthaginians and Dionysius, I. 150, IV. 24. they besiege Syracuse, I. 152, IV. 29. they are defeated by Dionysius, I. 152, IV. 34. the plague rages in Carthage, I. 155. second treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, 156. the Carthaginians endeavour to seize Sicily after the re-establishment of Dionysius the Younger, I 156, IV. 99. they are defeated by Timoleon, I. 158, IV. 112. war of the Carthaginians with Agathocles, at first in Sicily, I. 161. and after in Africa, 163. they sustain a war in Sicily against Pyrrhus, 172,

The Carthaginians are called in to aid the Mamertines, who give give them possession of their citadel, I. 176. they are driven out of it by the Romans, 177. they send a numerous army into Sicily, ibid. they lose a battle, which is followed with the taking of Agrigentum, their place of arms, ibid. they are beat at sea, first near the coast of Myle, 178, 179. and after at Ecnome, 180. they sustain the war against Regulus in Africa, I. 181. punishment inflicted on them upon that general, 190. they lose a battle at sea in flight of Sicily, 191. ardour of the Carthaginians in defence of Lilybaum, 192. their fleet is entirely defeated near the islands Ægates, 196. they make a treaty of peace with the Romans, which terminate this war, 197. war of the Carthaginians with the mercenaries, 199.
INDEX.

The Carthaginians are obliged to abandon Sardinia to the Romans, I. 211. they besiege and take Saguntum, 218. war between the two states again, 219. The Carthaginians pass the Rhone, 222. then the Alps, 226. their entrance into Italy, 230. they gain several victories over the Romans, near the Ticinus, 231. &c. near Trebia, 234. near Thrasymenè, 239. they lose several battles in Spain, 247. they gain a famous victory over the Romans at Cannæ, 251. bad success of the Carthaginians, 259, 260, 264. they are attacked in Africa by the Romans, 266. they recall Hannibal from Italy, 267. they are entirely defeated at Zama, 272. they demand peace of the Romans, ibid. and obtain it, 273. differences between the Carthaginians and Masinissa, 295. third war of the Carthaginians and Romans, 302. Carthage sends deputies to Rome to declare that it submits to the discretion of the Romans, 305. the latter order the Carthaginians to abandon their city, 308. the Carthaginians resolve to defend themselves, 311. the Romans besiege Carthage, 312. it is taken and demolished by Scipio, 323. it is rebuilt by Cæsar, 326. the Saracens destroy it entirely, 327.

Carthage formed upon the model of Tyre, I. 102. religion of the Carthaginians, 104. their barbarous worship of Saturn, 106, 108. government of the Carthaginians, 109. suffetes, 111. senate, ibid. people, 112. tribunal of the hundred, 113. defects in the government of Carthage, 115. the courts of justice and the finances reformed by Hannibal, 279. wife cullem of the Carthaginians in sending colonies into different countries, 116. commerce of Carthage, the principal source of its riches and power, 117. discovery of the gold and silver mines in Spain by the Carthaginians, second source of the riches and power of Carthage, 119. military power of Carthage, 120. arts and sciences in little esteem there, 124. characters, manners, and qualities of the Carthaginians, 128.

Carthagena, city of Spain, I. 213.

CARTHALO, commander of the auxiliary troops of the Carthaginians, declared guilty of treason, and why, I. 302.

CASSANDER, general of the Thracians and Pisonians, in the army of Alexander, IV. 375.

CASSANDER, son of Antipater, V. 75. provinces which fell to him after Alexander's death, 113. he puts Demades and his son to death, 151. he is assassinated.
INDEX.

ciated with Polysperchon in the regency of the kingdom of Macedonia, V. 151. he takes Athens, 163, and establishes Demetrius Phalereus in the government of it, ibid. he puts Olympos to death, 175. he confines Roxana, the wife of Alex- ander, with Alexander her son, in the castle of Amphipolis, 176. he reinstates the city of Thebes, 177. he enters into the league formed against Antigonus; 194. he concludes a treaty with him, and breaks it immediately, 198. he puts to death the young king Alexander, with his mother Roxana, 208. he besieges Athens, of which Demetrius Poliorcetes had made himself master, 281. the latter obliges him to raise the siege, and defeats him near Thermopylae, 252. Cassander concludes a league against Antigonus and Demetrius, 254. after the battle of Ipsus, he divides the empire of Alexander with three other princes, 258. death of Cassander, 264.

Cassander, Macedonian, by Philip's order, mafacres the inhabitants of Mareonia, VI. 180. that prince causes him to be put to death, 181.

Cassius (Lucius) Roman general, is defeated by Mithridates, VII. 153.

Cassius, quaestor of Crassus's army in the war with the Parthians, VII. 35. he puts himself at the head of the remains of that army, and prevents the Parthians from feizing Syria, 57. he forms a conspiracy against Caesar, 264. he is entirely defeated by Anthony, ibid.

Cato (M. Portius) surnamed the Centor, serves as lieutenant-general under the consul Aci- lius, VI. 107. his valour at the pafs of Thermopylae, ibid. he speaks in favour of the Rhodi- ans in the senate, 393. he ob- tains the return of the exiles for the Achaeans, 403. his con- duct in respect to Carneades, and the other Athenian ambas- sadors, 412. he is appointed by the commonwealth to depose Ptolemy king of Cyprus, and to confiscate his treasures, 551.

Cato, son of the former, acts prodigies of valour at the battle of Pydna, VI. 366.

C. Cato, tribune of the people, opposes the re-establishment of Ptolemy, VII. 238, &c.

Ceylac, people of India, sub- jected by Alexander, V. 24.

Cebalinus discovers the conspira- cy of Dymnus against Alex- ander, IV. 525.

Cecropis, founder of Athens, II. 283. he institutes the Areopaga- tus, ibid.

Celeuce, city of Phrygia, famous for the river of Marisia, IV. 388.

Cendorbus, general of Antio- chus Sidetes, is defeated in Jeru- salem by Judas and John, VI. 495.

Censorinus (L. Marcus) consul, marches against Carthage, I. 305, he notifies the senate's or- ders to that city, 308. he forms the siege of Carthage, 312.

Ceramica, suburb of Athens, III. 92.

Ceres, a city of Cappadocia, famous for its cherries, III. 352, VII. 218.

Ceres, goddess: Feasts instituted in honour of her at Athens, I. xii.

Ceres of Nile, I. 13.
INDEX.

Cerethrius, one of the generals of the Gauls, who made an irruption into Greece, V. 311

Ceryces, priests at Athens, III. 262

Cesar. See Caesar.

Cetus, offensive arms of the Athenians, I. lxiv

Cethhim, son of Javan, and father of the Macedonians, II.

Chabrias, Athenian, without order of the commonwealth accepts the command of the auxiliary troops of Greece in the pay of Achoros, IV. 189. He is recalled by the Athenians, ibid. He serves Tachos again without the consent of his republick, 194. The Athenians employ him in the war against their allies, 207. He dies at the siege of Chio, 210. praise of Chabrias, 203

Chærephon, disciple of Socrates, III. 439

Cheronea, city of Boeotia, famous for Philip’s victory over the Athenians and Thebans; and for that of Sylla over the generals of Mithridates, IV. 325, VII. 163

Chalcioicos, a temple of Minerva, at Sparta, V. 433

Chalisis, city of Aetolia, II. 276

Chaldæans, addicted to the study of judicial astrology, II. 244.
The sect of Sabæans formed of them, 252

Cham, son of Noah, worshipped in Africa under the name of Jupiter Ammon, I. 64

Chares, one of the generals of the Athenians in the war with the allies, IV. 210. His little capacity, 211. He writes to Athens against his two colleagues, ibid. He suffers himself to be corrupted by Artabaus, 206, 212. He is recalled to Athens, 207. He is sent to the aid of the Cheroneus, 308. The cities re-
INDEX.

cluded with the Romans, V. 552

Chosaphet, river of Babylonia, famous for the goodness of its waters, IV. 492

Chamni, measure of corn amongst the ancients, III. 140

Chorus incorporated with tragedy, I. ci.

Christians: The refusal of the Jews to work in rebuilding the temple of Belus, a lesson of instruction for many Christians, V. 72

Chrysantes, commander in the army of Cyrus at the battle of Thymbraea, II. 113

Chynameadanus. See Saracus.

Cicero (M. Tullius) his military exploits in Syria, VII. 57. he refuses a triumph, and why, 59. by his credit he causes Pompey to be appointed general against Mithridates, 214. his counsel to Lentulus, upon reinflating Ptolemy Auletes, 243. he discovers the tomb of Archimedes, 154. parallel between Cicero and Demosthenes, V. 130

Gelicia, province of Asia minor, I. xxxii

Cilles, Ptolemy's lieutenant, loses a battle against Demetrius, who takes him prisoner, V. 201

Cimmerians, people of Scythia. They are driven out of their country, and go to Asia, II. 60. Halyattes king of Lydia obliges them to quit it, ibid.

Cimon, son of Miltiades, when very young, signalizes himself by his piety to his father, II. 434. he encourages the Athenians by his example to abandon their city, and to embark, 481. he distinguishes himself at the battle of Salamin, 492. he commands the fleet sent by the Greeks to deliver their allies from the Persian yoke, in conjunction with Arisides, 525. the Athenians place Cimon at the head of their armies after Themistocles retires, III. 8. he makes several conquests in Thrace, and settles a colony there, 9. he makes himself master of the isle of Scyros, where he finds the bones of Theseus, which he brings to Athens, 10. his conduct in the division of the booty with the allies, 11. Cimon gains two victories over the Persians, near the river Eurymedon, in one day, 14. worthy use which he makes of the riches taken from the enemy, ibid. he makes new conquests in Thrace, 15. he marches to the aid of the Lacedaemonians, attacked by the Helots, 37. he is banished by the Athenians, 38. he quits his retreat, and repairs to his tribe to fight the Lacedaemonians, ibid. he is recalled from banishment, 39. he re-establishes peace between Athens and Sparta, ibid. he gains many victories, which oblige the Persians to conclude a treaty highly glorious for the Greeks, 40. he dies during the conclusion of the treaty, 41. character and praise of Cimon, 8, 9, 13, 41. use which he made of riches, 11

Cineas, Thessalian, famous orator, courtier of Pyrrhus, V. 324. his conversation with that prince, ibid. 325. Pyrrhus sends him ambassador to Rome, 332. his conduct during his stay there, 333. idea which he gives Pyrrhus of the Roman senate, ibid.

Cinna, his oppressions and cruelties at Rome, VII. 169

Cios, city of Bithynia. Philip's cruel treatment of the inhabitants of that city, VI. 5, 6

Claras, city of Ionia, famous for the oracles of Apollo, I. iii

Claudius
INDEX.

Claudius (Appius). See Appius.

Claudius (Ceno). Roman officer, is sent by Sulpius to the aid of Athens, VI. 13. he ravages the city of Chalcis, ibid.

Claudius (C.) sent by the Romans into Achaea: His conduct in respect to that people, VI.

399

Cleomene, city of Ionia, II. 288

Cleander, Theban, endeavours to excuse the rebellion of his country to Alexander, IV. 366

Cleander, Alexander's lieutenant in Media, assassimates Parmenio by his order, IV. 532

Clearchus, Lacedaemonian captain, takes refuge with Cyrus the Younger, III. 317. he is placed at the head of the Greek troops in that prince's expedition against his brother Artaxerxes, 326. he commands the Greek troops in their retreat after the battle, 335. he is seized by treachery, and sent to Artaxerxes, who causes him to be put to death, 341. praise of Clearchus, ibid.

Cleobis and Biton, brothers, models of fraternal affection, II. 63

Cleobulus, one of the seven sages of Greece, II. 356

Cleoctitus of Corinth appeals the dispute between the Athenians and Lacedaemonians after the battle of Platea, II. 507

Cleombrotus, king of Sparta, marches against the Thebans, IV. 142. he is killed at the battle of Leuctra, 145

Cleombrotus, son-in-law of Leonidas, causes himself to be elected king of Sparta to the prejudice of his father-in-law, V. 433. he is dethroned soon after by Leonidas, 437. and banished from Sparta, 439

Cleomenes, governor of Egypt for Alexander, V. 68

Cleomenes, king of Sparta, refuses to join the Ionians in their revolt against the Persians, II. 405. he marches against the people of Eginia, 425. he effects the expulsion of his colleague Demaratus from the throne, ibid. he reduces the people of Eginia, and dies soon after, ibid.

Cleomenes, son of Leonidas, marries Agiatis, V. 443. he ascends the throne of Sparta, 445. he enters into a war with the Achæans, 446. he gains many advantages over them, ibid. &c. he reforms the government of Sparta, and re-establishes the ancient discipline, 447, 448. he gains new advantages over the Achæans, 449, 451, 456. he sends his mother and children as hostages into Egypt, 459. he takes Megalopolis by surprize, 461. he is defeated at Selasia by Antigonus king of Macedonia, 470, &c. he retires into Egypt, 472. Ptolemy's reception of him, 474, 475. he cannot obtain permission to return into his country, 509. unfortunate death of Cleomenes, 511. his character, 444, 474

Cleon, Athenian, his extraction, III. 105. by his credit with the people, he prevents the conclusion of a peace between Sparta and Athens, 141. he reduces the Lacedaemonians, shut up in the island of Sphacteria, 144. he marches against Brasidas, and advances to the walls of Amphipolis, 150. surprized by Brasidas, he flies and is killed by a soldier, 160

Cleon, flatterer in Alexander's court, endeavours to persuade
INDEX.

the Macedonians to prostrate themselves before that prince, V. 562

Cleonnis commands the troops of the Meffenians in the first war with Sparta, I. cxlv, after the battle of Ithoma, he disputes the prize of valour with Antipomenes, cxlvi, he afterwards disputes the crown with him on the death of king Euphaes, cxlviii

Cleonymus, Spartan, being disappointed of the throne, retires to Pyrrhus, and engages him to march against Sparta, V. 352. History of this Cleonymus, ibid.

Cleopatra, niece of Attalus, marries Philip king of Macedonia, IV. 335

Cleopatra, Philip's daughter, is married to Alexander king of Epirus, IV. 336. Antigonus causes her to be put to death, V. 210

Cleopatra, daughter of Antiochus the Great, is promised and then given in marriage to Ptolemy Epiphanes, VI. 28, 83. After her husband's death she is declared regent of the kingdom, and her son's guardian, 201. Death of that princes, 242

Cleopatra, daughter of Ptolemy Epiphanes, makes an accommodation between her brothers Philometor and Evergetes, VI. 242. After the death of Philometor her husband, she marries Phyfcen, 482, 483. That prince puts her away to marry one of her daughters, 511. The Alexandrians place her upon the throne in Phyfcen's stead, 512. She is obliged to take refuge in Syria, 513

Cleopatra, daughter of Ptolemy Philometor, is married to Alexander Bala, VI 478. Her father takes her from Alexander, and marries her to Demetrius, 481. Whilft her husband is kept prisoner by the Parthians, she marries Antiochus Sidetes, 494. After the death of Sidetes, she returns to Demetrius, 514. She causes the gates of Ptolemais to be shut against him, ibid. She kills Seleucus her eldest son, 516. She dies of poison, which she would have given her second son Grypus, 518

Cleopatra, Philometor's daughter, marries Phyfcen, VI. 482. After her husband's death, she reigns in Egypt with her son Lathyros, whom she first obliges to repudiate his eldest sister Cleopatra, and to marry his youngest sister Selena, 519. She gives her son Alexander the kingdom of Cyprus, 522. She takes his wife Selena from Lathyros, drives him out of Egypt, and sets his younger brother Alexander upon the throne, 527, 528. She aids this prince against his brother, 528. She marries Selena to Antiochus Grypus, 531. Alexander causes her to be put to death, 535

Cleopatra, Phyfcen's daughter, and wife of Lathyros, is repudiated by her husband, VI. 520. She gives herself to Antiochus the Cyzicenian, ibid. Tryphena her sister causes her to be murdered, 522

Cleopatra, daughter of Lathyros. See Berenice

Cleopatra, daughter of Ptolemy Auletes, ascends the throne of Egypt in conjunction with her eldest brother, VII. 248. She is dethroned by the young king's guardians, 249. She raises troops to reinstate herself, ibid. She repairs to Caesar, and with what view, 254. Caesar establishes her queen of Egypt, jointly with her brother, 261.
the puts his brother to death, and reigns alone in Egypt, VII. 263. after Caesar's death she declares for the Triumvirs, 264. she goes to Anthony at Tarfus, 265. gets the ascendant of him, 267. she carries him to Alexandria, 268. her jealousy of Cestia, 272, 273. coronation of Cleopatra and her children, 274. she accompanies Anthony in his expeditions, 275. the Romans declare war against her, 281. she flies at the battle of Actium, 282, and returns to Alexandria, 283. she endeavours to gain Augustus, and designs to sacrifice Anthony to him, ibid. she retires into the tombs of the kings of Egypt, to avoid Anthony's fury, 287. that Roman expires in her arms, 288. she obtains permission from Caesar to bury Anthony, 291. she has a conversation with Caesar, ibid. &c. to avoid serving as an ornament in Caesar's triumph, she dies by the bite of an alpick, 293. character of Cleopatra, 297, 287, 294. her arts to keep Anthony in her chains, 273. the tale she retained for polite learning and the sciences, in the midst of her excites, 270 Cleopha, mother of Ascanus, king of the Mazage, reigns after the death of her for, V. 8. she surrenders to Alexander, who reinstates her in her dominions, 10 Cleophon, Athenian orator, animates the Athenians against the Lacedaemonians, III. 239. his character, 260 Clinias, citizen of Sicyn, is put to death by Abandias, V. 485 Clinias, Greek, of the island of Cos, commands the Egyptians in their revolt against Ochus, and is killed in a battle, IV. 228 Clithenes, tyrant of Sicyn: His method in the choice of a fon-in-law, II. 332 Clithenes, of the family of the Almazonidae, forms a faction at Athens, II. 341. he is obliged to quit that place, but returns soon after, ibid. Clitemachus, Carthaginian philosopher, I. 124 Clitus, one of Alexander's captains, slaves the life of that prince at the battle of the Granicus, IV. 380. Alexander gives him the government of the provinces of Anabafus, 552. and kills him the same day at a feast, 553. &c. Clitus, commander of Antonia's fleet, gains two victories over the Athenians, V. 123. Antigonus takes the government of Lydia from him, 153 Clodius, Roman, is taken by pirates, against whom he had been sent, VI. 551. he requisits Ptolemy king of Cyprus to lend him money for paying his ransom, ibid. in refection to Ptolemy, he obtains an order from the Roman people for dispossessing him of his dominions, 552 Clodius (Appius) is sent by Lucullus to Tigranes, to demand Mithridates, VII. 190, 193. his discourse occasions the army to revolt against Lucullus, 209. character of Clodius, ibid. Clonidius, general of the Gauls, called in by Pericles to his aid, VI. 350 Cosida, a maritime city of Asia minor, famous for Conon's victory over the Lacedaemonians, II. 289, III. 395 Codrus, the last king of Athens, II. 284. Caledonia, province of Asia minor, I. xxii Coenus, one of Alexander's captains, speaks to him in behalf of
INDEX.

of his soldiers, V. 32. his death, 34, his praise, ibid.

Colesb., province of Aia, I. xxx

Comitis. Advantages derived from them by the ancients, I. 117

Colossus of Rhodes: Description of it, V. 246. fate of that famous statue, 376

Combats celebrated by the ancients. See Battles.

Combats, publick ones of Greece, I. lxiii, &c. why encouraged, lxiv. rewards granted to the victors, lxxxvii. difference of the Greeks and Romans in their taste for these combats, xc. disputes for the prizes of poetry, xcv Comedian. The profession of a comedian not dishonourable amongst the Greeks, I. lxvii, &c.

Comedy: Its beginnings and origin, I. cxi. comedy divided into three classes; the ancient, cxxi. the middle, cxxiii. and the new, ibid.

Conon, Athenian general, is shut up by Cylicratidas in the port of Mitylene, III. 274. he is delivered soon after, 277. he retires into Cyprus after the defeat of the Athenians at Ægospotamos, 287. he goes to Artaxerxes, who makes him admiral of his fleet, 395. he defeats the Lacedæmonians near Cnides, ibid. he rebuilds the walls of Athens, 402. he is sent by the Athenians to Teribæus, who imprisons him, 403. death of Conon, 404. immunities granted by the Athenians to himself and his children, IV. 247

Conon, of Samos, mathematician, V. 391

Conquerors: In what manner the conquerors so much boast of in history are to be considered, II. 173, 450, V. 95, &c.

Consuls Roman: Solemnity of their setting out upon expeditions, VI. 311, 312

Corcyra, island in the Ionian sea, with a city of the same name, II. 275. its inhabitants promise aid to the Greeks against the Persians, 465. dispute between Corcyra and Corinth, III. 58

Corinth, city of Greece; its different forms of government, II. 286. and Corcyra, which occasions the Peloponnesian war, III. 58. Corinth sends aid to the Syracusians besieged by the Athenians, 303. enters into a league against Sparta, 389. is besieged by Agesilaus, 401. sends Timoleon to the aid of Syracuse against Dionysius the Younger, IV. 99. is obliged, by the peace of Antalcides, to withdraw her garrison from Argos, 117. gives Alexander the freedom of the city, V. 64. enters into the Achaean league, 420. infults the deputies sent by Metellus to appeale the troubles, VI. 426. the Romans destroy Corinth entirely, 431

Coriphæus, person employed in theatrical representations, I. cii

Cornelia, Roman lady, mother of the Gracchi, rejects Phyfcon’s proposal to marry her, VI. 466

Cornelia, Pompey’s wife, sees her husband assassinated before her eyes, VII. 251

Corona, city of Boeotia, famous for the victory of Agesilaus over the Thebans, III. 397

Corvinus (or Crane) machine of war, I. 179

Cos, island of Greece, Hippocrates’s country, III. 110

Cosis, brother of Orodes, commands the army against the Albanians, VII. 224. Pompey kills him in battle, ibid.

Cosini, magistrates of Crete, III. 503

Coffeante, very warlike nation of Media, subdued by Alexander, V. 62

Cothon,
INDEX.

Cotben, name of the port of Carthage, I. 320
Cotta, Roman consul, is defeated by Mithridates, VII. 181.
his cruelties at Heraclea, 194
Cotyla, measure of Attica, III. 140
Cotys, king of the Odryae in Thrace, declares for Perseus against the Romans, VI. 304.
the latter dismiss his son without ransom, 386
Courage; wherein true courage consists, III. 281
Courier. Invention of couriers, II. 154, 213
Course, or Racing: Exercize of it by the Greeks, I. lxxviii. of the foot-race, lxxix. of the horse-race, lxxx. of the chariot-race, ibid.
Courtiers: Wherein their merit and ability consists, III. 267
Cranaus, king of Athens, II. 283
Crassus, consul, marches against the Parthians, VII. 28. he plunders the temple of Jerusalem, 29, 30. he continues his march against the Parthians, 32. he is entirely defeated near Carræ, 38. the Parthians, under pretence of an interview, feize and kill him, 56
Crassus, son of the former, accompanies his father in his expedition against the Parthians, VII. 30. he perishes in the battle of Carræ, 43
Craterus, one of the principal officers of Alexander, draws on the ruin of Philotas by his discourse, IV. 527. he speaks to Alexander in the name of the army, and upon what occasion, V. 38. that prince gives him the government of Macedonia which Antipater had before, 61. provinces which fell to him after Alexander's death, V. 112. he marries Phila, Antipater's daughter, 133. he is defeated by Eumenes, and killed in the battle, 143
Cratesiclea, mother of Cleomenes, king of Sparta, is sent by her son as an hostage into Egypt, V. 459. generous sentiments of that princes, ibid.
Cratesipolis, wife of Alexander, the son of Polyperchon, corrects the insolence of the Sicyonians, who had killed her husband, and governs that city with wisdom, V. 178, 179
Chresphontes, one of the chiefs of the Heraclidae, re-enters Ptolomæus, where Messenia falls to him by lot, II. 288
Crete, island near Greece, description of it, II. 275. laws of Greece instituted by Minos, III. 499, &c. the Cretans refuse to join the Greeks attacked by Xerxes, II. 466, 467. they paid for the greatest liars of antiquity, III. 508
Crispinus (Q.) succeeds Appius, who commanded with Marcellus at the siege of Syracuse, VII. 123
Critias, one of the thirty tyrants at Athens, causes Thaemenes, one of his colleagues, to be put to death, III. 304, 305. he prohibits the instruction of the youth by Socrates, 306. he is killed fighting against Thraëfylbas, 307
Crito, intimate friend of Socrates, cannot persuade him to escape out of prison, III. 469
Critolalus, Peripatetick philosopher, his embassy to Rome, VI. 412
Critolalus, one of the chiefs of the Achæans, animates them against the Romans, VI. 425, &c. he is killed in a battle, 428
Crocodilse, amphibious animal, adored in Egypt, I. 40
Croesus king of Lydia, II. 61. his conquests, ibid. his means E e 4.
INDEX.

to try the veracity of the oracles, II. 67, 68. deceived by the answer of the oracle of Delphi, he undertakes a war with the Persians, 69, he loses a battle against Cyrus, 95. he is defeated near Thymbrea, 110. Cyrus besieges him in Sardis, 123, and takes him prisoner, 124. in what manner he escaped the punishment to which he had been condemned, 125. character of Croesus, 65. his riches, 61. his protection of the learned, ibid. his reception of Solon, ibid. his conversation with that philosopher, 62. on what occasion he dedicated a statue of gold in the temple of Delphi to the woman who baked his bread, I. lxii

Cromwell. His death compared with that of Dionysius the Tyrant, IV. 53

Crotón, city of Greece, built by Myccellus, III. 90

Crotus granted to the victorious combatants in the games of Greece, I. lxvi, lxxxvii

Ctesias, of Cnidos, practises phystick in Persia with great reputation, III. 366. his works place him in the number of the historians, ibid.

Cyaxara, city famous for the battle between Artaxerxes and his brother Cyrus, III. 323

Cyaxares I. reigns in Media, II. 52. he forms the siege of Nineveh, ibid. an irruption of the Scythians into Media obliged him to raise the siege, 53. he besieges Nineveh again and takes it, 54. his death, 56

Cyaxares II. called in Scripture Darius the Mede, ascends the throne of Media, II. 57. he sends to demand aid of Persia against the Assyrians, 78. expedition of Cyaxares and Cyrus against the Babylonians, 93.

Cyrus gives his daughter to Cyaxares in marriage, 105. he goes to Babylon with that prince, and forms in concert with him the plan of the whole monarchy, 154. death of Cyaxares, 157

Cycliades, president of the assembly of the Achæans held at Argos, eludes Philip's proposal, VI. 115

Cylon, known by taking the citadel of Athens, III. 65

Cynegirus, Athenian. His tenacious fierceness against the Persians in a sea-fight with them, II. 429

Cynisca, sister of Agesilaus, disputes the prize in the Olympic games, and is proclaimed victorious, I. lxxxvi, III. 400

Cyngersphale, an hill in Thessaly, famous for the victory of the Romans over Philip, VI. 45

Cyrus, island in the Mediterranean, delivered from the Persian yoke by the Greeks, II. 525. revolt of that island against Ochus, IV. 223. it submits, 227. horrible and bloody tragedy that passes there at the death of Nicoles, V. 199. after having been governed sometimes by the kings of Egypt, and sometimes by the kings of Syria, it is subjected to the Romans, VII. 553, 554

Cyprus, Corinthian, usurps supreme authority at Corinth, and transmits it to his son, II. 286

Cyrene, city upon the coast of the Mediterranean: In what manner the dispute between this city and Carthage, concerning their limits, is terminated, I. 135

Cyropédia, city of Sogdiana, destroyed by Alexander, IV. 539

Cyrus, son of Cambyses king of Persia: Birth of that prince, II. 50, 72. his education, ibid. he goes to the court of his grandfather Asyages, 74. his return into into Persia, II. 77. he marches to the aid of his uncle Cyaxares against the Babylonians, 78, 79. he reduces the king of Armenia, 85. he gains a first advantage over Croesus, and the Babylonians, 95. his conduct to Pantana, 98. he challenges the king of the Assyrians to a single combat, 103. he returns to Cyaxares, 104. that prince gives him his daughter in marriage, 105.
INDEX.

Cyrus marches to meet the Babylonians, II. 109. he gains a famous victory over them and Croesus at the battle of Thymbraea, 110. he makes himself master of Sardis, and takes Croesus prisoner, 123. he advances to Babylon, 127. and takes it, 137. conduct of Cyrus after the taking of Babylon, 145. he shews himself with great pomp to the newly-conquered people, 150. he goes to Persia, 154. at his return he carries Cyaxares to Babylon, and forms the plan of the whole monarchy, in concert with him, ibid. after the death of Cyaxares he reigns over the Medes and Persians, 157. he passes a famous edict in favour of the Jews, ibid. last years of Cyrus, 164. his death, and discourse with his children before his death, 165. praise and character of Cyrus, 167, &c. his continual attention to render the Divinity the worship he thought due to him, 121. difference of Herodotus and Xenophon in respect to Cyrus the Great, 175.

Cyrus, the younger son of Darius, is made governor in chief of all the provinces of Asia minor by his father, III. 153. his father recalls him, 283. after the death of Darius he forms the design of affalinating his brother, 296. he is sent back into Asia minor, 297. he cretly raises troops against his brother, 316. he sets out from Sardis, 320. the battle of Cyaxares, 323. he is killed in it, 327. praise of Cyrus, 331.

Cytherea, island of Greece, facing Laconia, II. 276.

Cyzicus, city of Propontis, VII. 182.

D.

Dædala, country of India, subjected by Alexander, V. 8.

Dæmon, or familiar spirit of Socrates, III. 436.

Damippus, Syracusan, sent by Epicydes to negociate with Philip king of Macedonia, VII. 124.

Damius disputes with Arilomnes the succession to the kingdom of Messenia after the death of Euphaes, I. cxliii.

Damocles learns, by his own experience, that the life of Dionysius the Tyrant was not so happy as it seemed, IV. 51.

Damocritus deputed to Nabis by the Ætolians, VI. 81. his insolent answer to Quintius, 94. he is made prisoner of war at the siege of Heraclea, 111.

Damocritus, chief magistrate of the Achæans, causes war to be declared against the Lacedæmonians, VI. 424.

Damon, friend of Pythias. Trial to which their friendship was put, IV. 50.

Danaus forms a design to murder Servottis his brother, I. 74. he retires into Peloponnesus, where he seizes the kingdom of Argos, ibid. II. 282.

Dancing cultivated by the Greeks, III. 531.

Daniel, prophet, is carried into captivity to Babylon, II. 35. he explains Nabucodonosor's first dream, ibid. and the second, 40. he is raised to the principal offices of the state, 36. discovers the fraud of the priests of Bel, and and causes the dragon to be killed, II. 41. visions of the prophet Daniel, 43, 160. he explains to Belshazzar the vision that prince had at a banquet, 43. he is made superintendent of the affairs of the empire, 155. he is thrown into the lions den, ibid. at his request Cyrus grants the edit, whereby the Jews are permitted to return to Jerusalem, 157. Daniel's skill in architecture, 159. reflections upon the prophecies of Daniel, 160, &c. Daricks, pieces of gold struck by Darius the Mede, II. 156, 218, III. 267

Darius the Mede: Cyaxares II, king of the Medes, is so called in Scripture. See Cyaxares.

Darius, son of Hystaspes. He enters into the conspiracy against Smerdis the Magian, II. 192. he runs him through with a sword, 193. he is made king of Persia by an artifice of his groom, 195. the eunuch he acquires by his wisdom and prudence, 201. he quits the name of Ochus to assume that of Darius, 365. marriages of Darius, ibid. 366. his method for transmitting to posterity the manner in which he attained the sovereignty, ibid. order which he establishes in the administration of the finances, 367. his moderation in imposing tributes, ibid. the Persians give him the surname of The Merchant, 368. he sends Democedes the physician into Greece, 374. he confirms the edit of Cyrus in favour of the Jews, 376. his gratitude to Sylonen, whom he re-establishes king of Samos, 377, 378

Darius reduces Babylon after a siege of twenty months, II. 378, &c. expedition of Darius against the Scythians, 391. Artabanus's remonstrance to Darius, ibid. &c. barbarous actions of Darius to the three children of Oebafus, 395. Darius conquers India, 403. he conceives the design of making himself master of Naxus, 404. the Ionians revolt against Darius, 406. he re-establishes the Tyrians in their ancient privileges, ibid. resentment conceived by Darius against the Athenians, who had shared in the burning of Sardis, 410. his expedition against Greece, 415. he sends heralds into Greece to found the states, and to demand their submission, 422. his army is defeated at Marathon, 424, &c. Darius resolves to go in person against Egypt and Greece, 436. he chuses his successor, 437. his death, 440. his epitaph, ibid. his character, ibid. &c. dispute between two of his sons for the crown, 438

Darius, the eldest son of Xerxes: His marriage with Artainia, II, 515, &c. he is murdered by his brother Artaxerxes, 543

Darius Nothus takes arms against Sogdianus, and puts him to death, III. 148. he ascends the throne of Persia, and changes his name from Ochus to Darius, 149. he causes his brother Arsies, who had revolted against him, to be smothered in ashes, 150. puts a stop to the rebellion of Pithunes, ibid. 151. and punishes the treason of Artaxares his principal eunuch, 152. he.quells the revolt of Egypt, 153. and that of Media, ibid. he gives the government of Asia minor to Cyrus his younger son, ibid. the instructions he gives him on sending him to his government, 266. Darius recalls Cyrus to court, 283, 284. death.
INDEX.

dead of Darius Nothus, III. 293. his memorable words to Artaxerxes his successor at his death, ibid. 295

Darius, son of Artaxerxes Mene-mon, conspires against his father's life, IV. 190. his conspiracy is discovered and punished, ibid. 200

Darius Codomanus is placed by Bagoas upon the throne of Persia, IV. 233. he loses the battle of the Granicus against Alexander, 378, &c. he orders Memnon the Rhodian to carry the war into Macedonia, 389. Darius resolves to command in person, 390. Caridemus, his free remonstrance to Darius, 396, &c. march of Darius's army, 398. famous victory of Alexander over Darius near the city of Iffus, 400, &c. Darius's haughty letter to Alexander, IV. 419. second letter of Darius to Alexander, 447. Darius receives advice of his wife's death, 469. his prayer to the gods upon being told in what manner she had been treated by Alexander, 471. Darius proposes new conditions of peace to Alexander, which are not accepted, 475. famous battle of Arbela, wherein Darius is defeated, 479, &c. retreat of Darius after that battle, 487. he quits Ecbatana, 503. his speech to his principal officers to induce them to march against the enemy, 504. he is betrayed and laid in chains by Bessus and Naborzanes, 505. unhappy death of that prince, 508. his last words, ibid.

Darius, king of the Medes, is subdued by Pompey, VII. 225

Datames, Carian, succeeds his father Camiastes in the government of Leaco-Syria, III. 422. he reduces Thyus, governor of Paphlagonia, who had revolted against the king of Persia, 423. he receives the command of the army designd against Egypt, ibid. he is ordered to reduce Alpis, 424. he revolts against Artaxerxes, 425. and gains several advantages over the troops sent against him, 427. he is assassinated by order of Artaxerxes, 428

Datis commands the army of the Persians at the battle of Marathon, II. 425

Debts. Laws of the Egyptians in respect to those who contracted debts, I. 32, 33. Solon's law for annihilating debts, II. 323

Decelia, fort of Attica, III. 204. is fortified by the Lacedaemonians, 218

Deidamia, daughter of Aiacides, wife of Demetrius, son of Antigonus, V. 201, 262. her death, 263

Dejoces forms the design of ascending the throne of Media, II. 44, &c. he is elected king by unanimous consent, 46. conduct of Dejoces in governing his kingdom, 47. he builds Ecbatana, 48. means he used for acquiring the respect of his subjects, 49, 264

Dejotarus, prince of Galatia: Pompey gives him Armenia minor, VII. 250. repartee of that prince to Ciaiius, 269

Delium. Place in Bceotia. Battle there between the Athenians and the Euboeans, III. 156

Delos, one of the Cyclades. The common treasures of Greece deposited in that island, II. 534. the Athenians send a ship every year to Delos, III. 468. Archelaus subjects Delos, and restores it to the Athenians, VII. 155

Delfos, city of Phocis, famous for Apollo's oracle there, I. liii.

the Pythia and Sybil of Delphi, 1.
INDEX.

and causes the dragon to be killed, II. 41. visions of the prophet Daniel, 43, 160. he explains to Belshazzar the vision that prince had at a banquet, 43. he is made superintendent of the affairs of the empire, 155. he is thrown into the lions den, ibid. at his request Cyrus grants the edit, whereby the Jews are permitted to return to Jerusalem, 157. Daniel’s skill in architecture, 159. reflections upon the prophecies of Daniel, 160, &c.

Darius, pieces of gold struck by Darius the Mede, II. 156, 218, III. 267

Darius the Mede: Cyaxares II, king of the Medes, is so called in Scripture. See Cyaxares.

Darius, son of Hytapeas. He enters into the conspiracy against Smerdis the Magian, II. 192. he runs him through with a sword, 193. he is made king of Persia by an artifice of his groom, 195. the efeeme he acquires by his wisdom and prudence, 201. he quits the name of Ochus to assume that of Darius, 365. marriages of Darius, ibid. 366. his method for transmitting to posterity the manner in which he attained the sovereignty, ibid. order which he establishes in the administration of the finances, 367. his moderation in imposing tributes, ibid. the Persians give him the surname of The Merchant, 368. he sends Democedes the physician into Greece, 374. he confirms the edict of Cyrus in favour of the Jews, 376. his gratitude to Syllofon, whom he re-establishes king of Samos, 377, 378

Darius reduces Babylon after a siege of twenty months, II. 378, &c. expedition of Darius against the Scythians, 391. Artabanus’s remonstrance to Darius, ibid. &c. barbarous actions of Darius to the three children of Oebafus, 395. Darius conquers India, 403. he conceives the design of making himself master of Naxus, 404. the Ionians revolt against Darius, 406. he re-establishes the Tyrians in their ancient privileges, ibid. resentment conceived by Darius against the Athenians, who had shared in the burning of Sardis, 410. his expedition against Greece, 415. he sends heralds into Greece to found the flates, and to demand their submiffion, 422. his army is defeated at Marathon, 424, &c. Darius resolves to go in person against Egypt and Greece, 436. he chuses his successor, 437. his death, 440. his epitaph, ibid. his character, ibid. &c. dispute between two of his sons for the crown, 438

Darius, the eldest son of Xerxes: His marriage with Artainta, II. 515, &c. he is murdered by his brother Artaxerxes, 543

Darius Nothus takes arms against Sogdianus, and puts him to death, III. 148. he ascends the throne of Persia, and changes his name from Ochus to Darius, 149. he causes his brother Arsines, who had revolted against him, to be smothered in ashes, 150. puts a stop to the rebellion of Pisuthnes, ibid. 151. and punishes the treason of Artaxares his principal eunuch, 152. he quells the revolt of Egypt, 153. and that of Media, ibid. he gives the government of Asia minor to Cyrus his younger son, ibid. the instructions he gives him on sending him to his government, 266. Darius recalls Cyrus to court, 283, 284. death.
INDEX.

dead of Darius Notus, III. 293. his memorable words to Artaxerxes his successor at his death, 295
Darius, son of Artaxerxes Mene-mon, confpires against his father's life, IV. 199. his conspiracy is discovered and punished, ibid. 200
Darius Codomanus is placed by Bagasius upon the throne of Persia, IV. 233. he loses the battle of the Granicus against Alexander, 378, &c. he orders Memnon the Rhodian to carry the war into Macedonia, 389. Darius resolves to command in person, 390. Caridemus, his free remonstrance to Darius, 396, &c. march of Darius's army, 398. famous victory of Alexander over Darius near the city of Issus, 400, &c.
Darius's haughty letter to Alexander, IV. 419. second letter of Darius to Alexander, 447. Darius receives advice of his wife's death, 469. his prayer to the gods upon being told in what manner she had been treated by Alexander, 471. Darius proposes new conditions of peace to Alexander, which are not accepted, 475. famous battle of Arbela, wherein Darius is defeated, 479, &c. retreat of Darius after that battle, 487. he quits Ecbatana, 503. his speech to his principal officers to induce them to march against the enemy, 504. he is betrayed and laid in chains by Bessus and Nasbarzanes, 505. unhappy death of that prince, 508. his last words, ibid.
Darius, king of the Medes, is subdued by Pompey, VII. 225
Datames, Carian, succeeds his father Camiaries in the government of Leuco-Syria, III. 422. he reduces Thyus, governor of Paphlagonia, who had revolted against the king of Persia, 423. he receives the command of the army designed against Egypt, ibid. he is ordered to reduce Asia, 424. he revolts against Artaxerxes, 425. and gains several advantages over the troops sent against him, 427. he is affasinated by order of Artaxerxes, 428
Datis commands the army of the Persians at the battle of Marathons, II. 425
Debti. Laws of the Egyptians in respect to thole who contracted debts, I. 32, 33. Solon's law for annihihating debts, II. 323
Deelia, fort of Attica, III. 204. is fortified by the Lacedaemonians, 218
Deidamia, daughter of Aesacides, wife of Demetrius, son of Antigonus, V. 261, 262. her death, 263 Deioces forms the design of ascending the throne of Media, II. 44, &c. he is elected king by unanimous consent, 46. conduct of Deioces in governing his kingdom, 47. he builds Ecbatana, 48. means he used for acquiring the respect of his subjects, 49, 264
Dejotarus, prince of Galatia: Pompey gives him Armenia minor, VII. 230. repartee of that prince to Crassus, 209
Delium. Place in Boeotia. Battle therebetween the Athenians and Thebans, III. 156 Delos, one of the Cyclades. The common treasures of Greece deposited in that island, II. 534. the Athenians send a ship every year to Delos, III. 468. Archelaus subjects Delos, and restores it to the Athenians, VII. 155 Delphos, city of Phocis, famous for Apollo's oracle there, I. iiii.
the Pythia and Sybil of Delphi, 1.
INDEX.

I, liii, lii, temple of Delphos burnt and rebuilt, lxi

Delta, or Lower Egypt, I. 22

Deluge of Deucalion, II. 283, that of Ogyges, ibid.

Demades opposes the advice of Demosthenes, IV. 282, he is taken prisoner at the battle of Chaeronea, 326. he goes ambassador to Alexander from the Athenians, 368. he prepares the decree for the death of Demosthenes, V. 125. Demades with his son Casander killed, 151

Demarata, wife of Andronocus: She persuades her husband not to submit to the senate of Syracuse, VII. 107, 108. she is killed, 110

Demaratus, king of Sparta, expelled the throne by Cleomenes his colleague, II. 423. his fine and noble answer to Xerxes, 463, 475. vain and insolent demand of Demaratus to Artaxerxes, III. 7

Demetrius (Phalereus) he is obliged to quit Athens, and is condemned to die in his absence, V. 127, 155. Casander settles him there to govern the republic, 163. his wisdom and ability in the government, 164, &c. three hundred and sixty statues are erected to him out of gratitude, 213. reflection upon that great number of statues erected in honour of Demetrius Phalereus, 221. he retires to Thebes after the taking of Athens by Demetrius Poliorcetes, 215. his statues are thrown down, and he is condemned to die at Athens, 218, II. 423, he takes refuge with Casander, and afterwards in Egypt, V. 219, 220. he is made intendant of king Ptolemy's library, 280. his death, 302. character of his eloquence and writings, ibid, &c.

Demetrius, son of Antigonus, surnamed Poliorcetes: His character, V. 229, 272, &c. he begins to make himself known in Asia minor, 196. he loses a battle at Gaza against Ptolemy, 200. he gains one soon after against Ciles, the fame Ptolemy's lieutenant, 201. he is sent by his father to Babylon against Seleucus, 205. he makes Ptolemy raise the siege of Halicarnassus, ibid. he makes himself master of Athens, 214. and reinitiates the democratical government, 216, &c. excessive gratitude of the Athenians to him, 217, &c. his marriage, 224. he besieges Salamina, 223, &c. and takes it, 224. he receives the title of king, 225. his conduct in war and peace, 229

Demetrius forms the siege of Rhodes, V. 230, &c. he makes Casander raise the siege of Athens, 252. excessive honour which he receives in that city, ibid. he marries Didamia, 253. he is proclaimed general of the Greeks, and initiated into the great and leffer mysteries, ibid. 254. he is defeated at the battle of Ipsus, 257. Athens shuts her gates against him, 262. he takes that city, 267. he forms the design of subjecting the Lacedæmonians, 268. he lothes almolt at the same time all his dominions in Asia, ibid. Demetrius called in to the aid of Alexander, Casander's son, Demetrius, destroys him, and is proclaimed king of Macedonia, 270. he makes great preparations for recovering his father's empire in Asia, 271. he is obliged to abandon Macedonia, 272. he surrenders himself to Seleucus, who keeps him prisoner, 279, &c. his death, 281.
INDEX

DEMETRIUS, brother of Antigonus Gonatas, is put to death in Apamea's bed, V. 375
DEMETRIUS, son and successor of Antigonus Gonatas, I. clxi, V. 395, 402. his death, 418
DEMETRIUS of Pharus, prince of Illyria, V. 419. he advices Philip king of Macedonia to carry the war into Italy, 544
DEMETRIUS, son of Philip king of Macedonia, is given as an hostage to the Romans, VI. 55. the Romans send him back to his father, 113. Philip sends Demetrius ambassador to Rome, 181. Demetrius justifies his father to the Romans, 202: he returns into Macedonia, 203. Periuss's secret plot against his brother Demetrius, 207. he accuses him to his father, 208. Demetrius's defence against the accusations of Periuss, 219. Philip causes him to be put to death, 230
DEMETRIUS SOTER, after having been long an hostage at Rome, demands permission to return into Syria in vain, VI. 460. he flies from Rome, 470. he ascends the throne of Syria, and receives the surname of Soter from the Babylonians, 471. he makes war against the Jews, ibid. &c. he places Holophernes upon the throne of Cappadocia, 407, 474. the Romans acknowledge him king of Syria, 474. he abandons himself to fealing and voluptuoufness, 475. conspiracy against him, ibid. he endeavour to engage the Jews in his interests, 476, 477. he is killed in a battle, 478.

DEMETRIUS Nicator, son of Demetrius Soter, claims the crown of Syria, 480. he marries the daughter of Ptolemy Philometor, 481. he drives A-lexander the usurper out of Syria, and remains in quiet possession of the throne, 481. exceeds of Demetrius, 483. Jonathan sends him aid against the people of Antioch, 485. he is driven out of Syria, 486. his manner of living at Laodicea, whither he had retired, 489. he is taken prisoner in an expedition against the Parthians, 491. he marries Rodoguna, daughter of Mithridates king of Parthia, ibid. he makes ineffectual attempts to return into his kingdom, 507. he recovers his dominions, 509. he is defeated in a battle by Alexander Zebina, 514. his death, ibid.

DEMETRIUS Eucharis is established king at Damascus, VI.

DEMIURGES, magistrates amongst the Achaen, VI. 166
DEMOCEDES, physician of Crotona; he cures Darius, II. 371. history of that physician, ibid. he returns into Greece, 374. he settles at Crotona, where he marries the daughter of Milo the Athleta, 375

DEMOCHARES, one of the murderers of Agis king of Sparta, V. 439. &c.

DEMOCLIS, surnamed the Fair, V. 252. throws himself, to exclude the violence of Demetrius, into a vessel of boiling water prepared for a bath, ibid.

DEMOPHANTES, general of the horse to the Elaen, is killed by Philocemen before the city of Elis, V. 556

DEMOSTHENES is chosen by the Athenians commander of a fleet for the aid of Nicias in Sicily, III. 217, 224. he makes an attempt against Syracuse without success, 225. he is reduced to surrender at discretion to the Syracusans, 237. he is put to death, 231.
INDEX.

Demosthenes the Orator. Abridgment of his life to the time when he begins to appear in the tribunal of harangues, IV. 234, &c. he appears for the first time in publick, and encourages the Athenians against the preparations for war of Artaxerxes, 215. his oration in favour of the Megalopolitians, 217. he speaks for the Rhodians, 221. he proposes and occasions the passing of a law for the equipment of fleets, which annuls another very heavy upon the poorer citizens, 243. his discourse in defence of the law that granted exemptions, 247, &c.

Demosthenes, upon occasion of Philip's attempt to seize Thermopylae, harangues the Athenians, and animates them against that prince, IV. 277. he is sent ambassador to Philip, 288. his oration upon the peace, 295. that upon the Cheroneus, 298. Demosthenes presses the Athenians to declare for the Lacedæmonians against Philip, 302. his Philippiicks, 307. his oration to frustrate the effects of Philip's letter to the Athenians, 311. his advice after the taking of Elatea by that prince, 319, &c. he is sent upon an embassy to Thebes, 322. he flies in the battle of Cheronaæ, 326. he is cited to a trial before the people, who acquit him, and do him great honours, 329. Æschines accuses him, 332. generosity of Demosthenes to his accusers, 333. his inmoderate joy for Philip's death, 338, 339.

Demosthenes animates the people against Alexander, IV. 364. he prevents the Athenians from delivering up the orators to Alexander, 367. Demosthenes suffers himself to be corrupted by Harpalus, V. 56. he is condemned and banished, 57. he is recalled from banishment, 118. he quits Athens, before the arrival of Antipater, 124. he is condemned to die, 125. he puts an end to his life by poison, 128. the Athenians erect a statue of brass to him, 129.

Dercyllidas, surnamed Siphbus, receives the command of the Lacedæmonian troops in the room of Thymbron, III. 363. he takes Aëolia from Midaes, who had possessed himself of it by putting his mother-in-law Dania to death, 365. he youth up the ifthmus of the Thracian Cheroneus, ibid. truce concluded between Dercyllidas, Pharnabazus, and Tissaphernes, 367.

Diserters. Charondas's law in respect to them, III. 94.

Deucalion, king of Theffaly, II. 287. deluge of Deucalion, 283, 287.

Deucetius, chief of the people called Sicilians. His history, III. 86.

Dios, one of the chiefs of the Achæans, fows discords amongst them, VI. 425, &c. he takes upon him the command of the army in the room of Critolaus, 428. his unfortunate end, 431.

Diagoras, the Melian, is condemned at Athens for teaching atheism, III. 194.

Dialects. The four dialects of the Greeks, II. 289.

Dicerarchus, ancient admiral of Philip king of Macedon, and accomplice with Scopas in the conspiracy against Ptolemy Epidianes, VI. 65.

Dicerarchus, brother of Thoas, general of the Aëolians. He is deputed by them to Antiochus, VI. 81.

INDEX.

Didas, governor of Paeonio, puts Demetrius to death, by order of Philip, VI. 230

Dido: Her history, I. 131, &c.

Dinocrates, architect, he presides in building the temple of Diana at Ephesus, IV. 383.

Dion, governor of Damaicus, V. 493

Dionysius, one of the generals of the Syracusans: His advice concerning the Athenians taken in Sicily, III. 238

Diocles, Aetolian, takes Demetrias, VI. 94

Diodorus, Athenian, opposes the putting to death of the inhabitants of Mitylene, III. 132

Diogenes, the Cynick refuses to be initiated in the mysteries of Ceres Eleusina, I. xliv. he receives a visit from Alexander the Great, IV. 370

Diogenes, Stoick philosopher, is sent on an embassy to Rome by the Athenians, VI. 412

Diocletus, admiral of Antonius the Great, V. 493, 495

Diomedon, one of the generals condemned to die for having left the bodies unburied of those who were killed in the battle of Arginusae. His speech before his death, III. 279

Dion of Syracusae: His character and friendship with Plato, IV. 23. he persuades Dionysius the Elder to have some conversation with Plato, ibid. his marriage with Arete daughter of Dionysius, 47. his magnumonious generosity to Dionyiusthe Younger, 53. &c. he becomes odious to the courtiers, 54. Dion determines Dionysius to invite Plato to his court, 56. the courtiers spare no pains to dis-credit him with Dionysius, 61. he is banished, 63. he resides at Athens, 65. he visits the other cities of Greece, 66. Dionysius caues Dion's ellates and effects to be sold, 68. and makes his wife Arete marry Timocrates, 69. Dion determines to attack him with open force, ibid. &c. he embarks on board two merchant ships for Syracuse, 72. he appears before the walls of the city, 74. success of his enterprize, ibid. he defeats the troops of Dionysius, 76. ingratitude of the Syracusans to Dion, 78. he retires to Leonium, 80. he is recalled by the Syracusans, 82. he delivers Syracuse, and pardons his enemies, 85. &c. Dion enters the citadel, which is surrendered to him by the son of Dionysius, and is reconcilled to his wife Arete, 89. reflection upon Dion's modesty, ibid. &c. he suffers Heraclides to be put to death, 90. Callippus conceives the design of affalinating Dion, and puts it in execution, 91. &c.

Dion, famous philosopher, sent by the Egyptians ambassador to Rome against Ptolemey Auletes, VII. 249

Dionysius the Elder, tyrant of Syracuse: His peculiar characteristic, IV. 3. means which he uses for poisseling himself of the tyranny, 4. &c. he is appointed generalissimo with unlimited power, 11. he succeeds in having guards assigned him, 17. and establishes himself tyrant, ibid. attempts at Syracuse and in Sicily against him, 13, &c. he makes preparations for a war with the Carthaginians, 18, &c. the people of Rhegium refuse refuse to ally themselves with the tyrant, IV. 22. he marries two wives at the same time, ibid. his friendship and deference for Dion, 23. he besieges and takes Motya, 26, 27. he is defeated at sea, 28. the Syracusan troops gain an advantage over the Carthaginians in the absence of Dionyfius, 30. new movements at Syracuse against him, 31. he entirely defeats the Carthaginians, and obliges them to quit Sicily, 32. he punishes the inhabitants of Rhegium, 35. violent passion of Dionyfius for poetry, 37, 42. &c. reflections upon that taste of his, 39. he sends his brother Theriales to Olympia to dispute the prizes of the chariot-race and poetry, 40. new enterprizes of Dionyfius against the Carthaginians, 46. he carries the prize of poetry at Athens, ibid. death of Dionyfius, 47. his character, ibid. &c.

Dionyfius the Younger succeeds his father, IV. 52. his conduct in the beginning of his reign, 54. his good qualities, 56. Dion induces Dionyfius to caufe Plato to come to his court, 57. in what manner Plato is received there, 59. wonderful change occasioned by the presence of that philosopher, ibid. Dionyfius banifhes Dion, 63. he dismifhes Plato, 64. he presfles him to return to Syracuse, with which Plato complies, 67. Dionyfius grants Plato permission to return into Greece, 69. embafly from Dionyfius to Dion, who had poifefled himfelf of Syracuse, 73. defeat of Dionyfius’s troops, 76. method which he ufed for rendering Dion suspected, 77. he retires into Italy, 79. he re-ascends the throne, 97. Icteas obliges him to fhit himfelf up in the citadel of Syracuse, 103, 104. Dionyfius treats with Timoleon, who fends him to Corinth, 104, &c. wife anfwer of Dionyfius to a stranger, 106, I. 157, VII. 138.

Diopites, chief of the colony fent by the Athenians into the Chersonefs, makes an irruption into the lands of Philip king of Macedonia, IV. 297. he is acfufed by Philip’s pensioners, and defended by Demofthenes, 298.

Diofoboli. Those who exercised themselves in throwing the difes, I. lxxvi.

Discus. King of athletick combat, I. lxxvii.

Distribution of lands infituted at Sparta by Lycurgus, II. 295. reflections upon that infitution, 308.

DODANIM, the fourth of the ions of Javan, II. 279.

Dodona, Oracle of Dodona, I. li.

Delphium, machine of war, III. 223.

Domituus Aenobarbus fent commissioner by the Romans into Achaia, where he commits the moft enormous opprefions, VI. 399, &c.

Dorick dialect, II. 290.

Dorimachus, general of the Etolians, V. 516.

Doris, country of ancient Greece: Origin of its inhabitants, II. 289.

Doris, wife of Dionyfius the Elder, IV. 22.

Dorus, second fon of Hellenus, gives his name to Doris, II. 287.

Dory-
INDEX.

Elphantis: Description of those animals, V. 5. manner of taking them, ibid. &c.

Elvfit, a small city of Attica, where the Athenians celebrated a feast in honour of Ceres, I. xli

Elvis, province of Peloponnesus, where the Olympic games were celebrated, I. 91, II. 274

Elisa. See Dido.

Eliza, son of Javan, settles in Peloponnesus, II. 278

Eloquence: Definition of it, III. 49. of what eloquence united with the love of the publick good is capable, IV. 324. how necessary it is to a prince or statesman, 303, V. 198, 323. it was the principal study of the youth of Athens and Rome, III. 536. defects contrary to true eloquence, IV. 332

Ele, city in the territory of Sparta, subjected by the Lacedaemonians, I. cxl

Elmyart, a city of Persia, supposed to be very rich, VI. 276, 277

Embalmng. Manner of embalming bodies amongst the Egyptians, I. 44

Emilia, sister to Paulus Emilius: Riches left by her to Scipio at her death, I. 329

Emilius (Paulus) is chosen consul, VI. 340. he sets out for Macedonia, 347. exacts and severe discipline which he establishes in his army, 353. he gains a famous victory over Perseus near the city of Pydna, 363, &c. he pursues Perseus in his flight, 369. that prince puts himself into his hands, 372. Paulus Emilius is continued in the command of the army in Macedonia, 375. during the winter-quarters he visits the most famous cities of Greece, 376. upon his return to Amphipolis, he imparts to the Macedonians the regulations made by himself and the senate in respect to Macedonia, 379, &c. he gives a great feast there, 381. he sets out for Rome by the way of Epirus, the cities of which he abandons to be plundered by the troops, 382. he enters Rome in triumph, 384, 385

Emilius, deputy from the Romans, goes to Philip, who had besieged Abydos, and exhorts him in the name of the senate to lay down his arms, VI. 11. he goes to Egypt to take possession of the guardianship of the king for the Roman people, ibid.

Emilius (L. Paulus) is elected consul with Varro, I. 248. he is killed at the battle of Canna, 251

Emilius (Q.) gives Pyrrhus advice of the design to poison him, V. 342

Empedocles, of Agrigentum, Phthagorean philosopher, having gained the prize in the Olympic games, regales the people, I. lxxxviii

Empires. See Kingdoms.

Ena, a very rich temple in Media, V. 592

Envy, a disease of the mind scarce ever cured, V. 186

Epaminondas, Theban, his character, IV. 123. his conduct in the conspiracy against the tyrants of Thebes, 126. he goes to Sparta to treat of peace, 140. he gains a great victory over the Lacedaemonians near Leuctra, 143. he ravages Laconia, 149. and advances to the gates of Sparta, 151. at his return he is accused before the people and acquitted, 154. he marches against Alexander tyrant of Phœ- ræ, and delivers Pelopidas out of his hands, 165. he returns to Thebes, 167. he is placed at at the head of the Theban army, IV. 172. his second attempt against Sparta, 173. his famous victory at Mantinea, 176. he is mortally wounded in the battle, 178. his death, 180. and praise, ibid.
INDEX

EpERATUS, by the credit of Apelles, Philip's minister, is appointed general of the Achaens, V. 519. universal contempt of him. 537

EpHOrus, city of Ionia, II. 283

EpHIALTES, orator, endeavours to prevent the Achenians from aiding the Lacedaemonians, III. 35

EpHORI, magistrates of Sparta: Their institution, II. 295. their authority, ibid. III. 372

EpicerDus, of Cyrene: His generositi to the Achaens, IV. 246

Epick poet, its origin, I. xcvii

EpICRATUS, one of the generals of Antiochus the Cyzicenian, betrays the interests of that prince, and treats secretely with Hyrcanus, VI. 524

EpICRATES, porter at Athens: Pleasantry of that Athenian upon the deputies that had been sent into Persia, IV. 159

EpICYDES, Athenian: His little courage and avarice, II. 466. he suffers himself to be brought over by Themistocles, 467

EpICyDES, Carthaginian, sent by Hannibal to Hieronymus, remains with that prince, VII. 104. after the death of Hieronymus, he demands to return to Hannibal, 109. he is elected magistrate at Syracuse, 112. he marches to the aid of Leontium, and is put to flight by Marcellus, 114. he usurps supreme authority at Syracuse, after having caused the magistrates to be put to death, 116. he retires to Agrigentum, when he fees Marcellus master of Syracuse, 127

Epidsrmum, or Dyrrhochium, a maritime city of Macedonia, III. 58

EpigOnis: Signification of that word, V. 54

Epipolae, part of the city of Syracuse, III. 193

EpIrus: Geographical description of it, II. 273. history of its kings, I. clxiv, clxv

EpistHEnES of Amphipolis, officer in the army of Cyrus the Younger, III. 328

Equality: It is the soul of popular governments, II. 323. it is the basis and tie of liberty, III. 500, 519

EraSInides, one of the Athenian captains that gained the battle of Arginusæ, III. 274. on his return he is condemned to die with his colleagues, 280

EraSistratus, physician, famous for his address and penetration in discovering the cause of Antiochus's sickness, V. 305

Eratosthenes of Cyrene, keeper of the Alexandrian library, V. 98

Erectheus, king of Athens, II. 283

Eretria, city of Bubcea, supports the Ionians in their revolt against the Persians, II. 409. it is destroyed by the Persians, 424, &c.

Erginus, Corinthian, supplies A stated with the means of seizing the citadel of Corinth, V. 412

Esarhaddon ascends the throne of Assyria, II. 31. he takes Babylon and the country of Israel, ibid. he carries away Mansashe king of Judah, 32. his death, ibid.

EuseBAPtus, inventor of medicine, II. 239. his knowledge occasions his being ranked in the number of the gods, ibid.

EsDras obtains permission of Artaxerxes Longimanus to return

F s 2

10
INDEX.

to Jerusalem, III. 24. he dif" poles the holy Scriptures into their proper order, 27
Esther causes the fatal edict of Ahafuerus against the Jews to be revoked, II. 207, 377
Euthia. See Euthia.
Etonians. See Etonians.
Evagoras, king of Salamin, III.
408. brief history of that prince, ibid. &c. his war with Artaexerxe: Mnemon, 410, &c. his death, IV. 186. character and praise of Evagoras, III. 413 Evagoras, son of Nicocles, is deprived of the throne of Sa-lanin by Protagoras, IV. 223.
he demands in vain to be reinflated, 227. tragical end of that prince, ibid.
Evacleus, general of the Laced-aemonian cavalry, is killed in a battle by Pyrrhus, V. 359 Evander of Crete, general of the auxiliaries to Perseus, is sent by that prince to assassinate Eu-menes, VI. 299. he prevents Per-seus from improving the advantage he had gained over the Romans, 320. attachment of Evander to Perseus, 368. that prince causes him to be killed, 371
Embora, isle of Greece, II. 276.
subjected by the Athenians, III.
56. the Lacedaemoneis seize it, 256. Antiochus takes that island, VI. 103. it is soon after taken from him by the confid
Alcilius, 169
Euclidas, of Platea, undertakes to bring the sacred fire from Delphi, II. 509. he dies at his return, ibid.
Euclid of Megara, founder of the Megarean sest., his ardour to hear Socrates, III. 443 Euclidas, Lacedaemonian. His brother Cleomenes, king of Sparta, makes him reign with him,
V. 449. he is routed at the battle of Selasia, where he commanded part of the army, 470, 478 Eudamidas, Lacedaemonian, commands in the war against Olym-thus, IV 118
Evimerodach, king of Babylon, II. 43
Eulæus, eunuch: Bad education that he gives Ptolemy Philomet-tor, whole governor he was,
VI. 247, 248
Eumenes, general in Alexander's army. Provinces that fell to him after that prince's death,
V. 112. his marriage with Barsina, 114. he retires to Perdiccas, who puts him into perpetual of Cappadocia, 138. victory of Eumenes over Neopto-lemus, and then over Craterus and Neoptolemus together, 142.
he kills the latter with his own hand in the battle, 143. he is deceived by Antigonus, and retires into the castle of Nora, where he is besieged, 147. battles between Eumenes and Antigonus, 179, 183, 186, 188.
he is betrayed by his troops, 189. delivered up to Antigo-nus, 190. and put to death,
191. praise of Eumenes, ibid.
Eumenes I. nephew of Philateres, succeeds his uncle in the kingdom of Pergamus, V. 370.
he gains a great victory over Antiochus Soter, who came to pollute himself of his dominions, 371. he attacks Antiochus Hierax, who was engaged in a war against his brother, 396.
he abandons himself to excesses which occasion his death, ibid.
Eumenes II. succeeds his father Attalus in the kingdom of Per-gamus, VI. 43. he refutes the alliance of Antiochus, 83. he is besieged in his capital by Seleucus, 117. the Romans deliver him, ibid. 118. dispute between
INDEX.

Euripides, tragic poet, I. civ. character of that poet, civii, &c.

Euriptodemu§ takes upon him the defence of the generals condemned by the Athenians after the battle of Arginae, III. 281

Eurybiades, Lacedæmonian, is appointed generalissimo of the Greeks in preference to Themistocles, II. 469. the latter determines to fight in the straits of Salamin, 487. the Lacedæmonians decree him the prize of valour, 492

Eurydice, wife of Amyntas, king of Macedonia, prevails upon Iphicrates, by her entreaties, to reinstate her children upon the throne of their father, IV. 253

Eurydice, wife of Arideus: Olymias cauæs her to be put to death, V. 173

Eurydice, Athenian, wife of Ophiellas, V. 212. after her husband's death she marries Demetrius, ibid. 221

Eurydice, widow of Ptolemy Soer, marries her daughter Ptolemaida to Demetrius, V. 277

Euryclus, an eminence near Syracuse, leading to Epipola, III. 199

Eurymedon, general of the Athenians, is condemned to pay a great fine, and why, III. 175. he goes into Sicily to the aid of Nicias, 217. he is killed in a battle, 230

Eurysthenes, king of Sparta, I. cxxxix.

Euristheus, king of Myceæ, famous for the twelve labours which he made Hercules undertake, II. 282

Eurytion, or Eurypon, king of Sparta, renounces some part of the
INDEX

the absolute power of the kings in favour of the people, I. cxx Euthycrates, chief magistrate of Olynthus, pus that city into Philip’s hands, IV. 285
Euthydemus, appointed by the Athenians to command jointly with Nicias, forces that general to engage in a sea-fight, wherein he is worsted, III. 222
Euthydemus, king of Baetria, makes an honourable peace with Antiochus, who intended to depose him, V. 594
Exemption, or Immunities, granted by the Athenians to those who had rendered their country great services, IV. 245
Exegetes, of Agrigentum, victor in the Olympic games, enters that city in triumph, IV. 5 Exiles, name given the citizens expelled by Nabis from Sparta, V. 580. supported by the Achaeans, they commit great cruelties at Sparta, VI. 154; they accuse the Achaeans at Rome, 179. consequence of that accusation, 193, &c.

F.

Fabius Maximus (Quintus) is appointed dictator, I. 242. his conduct in respect to Hannibal, 243, &c. the people give Minucius, general of the horse, equal power with him, 246. Fabius extricates him out of a danger, in which his ill conduct had engaged him, 247

Fabius Maximus, son of Paulus Emilius, distinguishes himself in the war against Perseus, VI. 357

Facts. Authors to whom the invention of them is ascribed, II. 361. Use of fables in respect to the education of children, ibid.

Fabricius is deputed by the Romans to Pyrrhus, V. 334. he commands in the war against that prince, 341

Famine. It is the surest bulwark of a state, III. 156, and a quality essential to a prince, 76, 355. breach of faith often one of the principal causes of the ruin of empires, II. 269, &c.

Famine in Egypt in the time of the emperor Trajan, I. 59

Fannius (C.) Roman officer, distinguishes himself at the siege of Carthage, I. 323

Farmers, or farmers of taxes, people little sensible to merit, III. 539, 530. their want of humanity, ibid. VII. 190

Festivals, celebrated at Athens, I. xxxvi, &c. and at Lacedaemon, II. 492, 510

Fimbria, commander of the Romans in Asia, defeats the troops of Mithridates, VII. 167, 168. he kills Flaccus, seizes that consul’s army, and marches against Mithridates, 174. upon being abandoned by his troops, he kills himself in despair, 174

Flaccus (L. Valerius) is elected consul and marches against Mithridates, VII. 166. he is killed by Fimbria, 171

Flamininus (Quintius) is deputed by the Romans to Pyrrhus, I. 289. he is elected consul, and marches against Philip king of Macedon, VI. 25. he gains a first advantage over that prince, 30. different expeditions of Flamininus in Phocis, 31. he is continued in the command as pro-consul, 38. he has an ineffectual interview with Philip, 39. he gains a great victory over that prince near Scotus and Cynocephale, 48, 49. and concludes a peace with him, 54, 55. honours and applauses which he receives in the Isthmian games, 56, 57. he makes war against Nabis, 68. besieges him in Sparta, 73, and grants
INDEX.

Gran's him peace, VI. 74. He triumphs at Rome, 78, 79
Flaminiius (C.) consul marches against Hannibal, I. 239. He is defeated, and killed near the lake of Thrasylmenus, 241
Flattery. Causes of the propensity of princes to be seduced by flattery, II. 64

Four hundred men invested with all authority at Athens, and abuse it tyrannically, III. 252. Their power is annulled, 256
French. Ideas people had of the ancient Gauls, VI. 158, &c. What passed at the siege of Philippiburgh ought to undeceive those, who have the same idea of the modern French, 159, &c.
Friendship. Fundamental law of it, III. 371
Fulvia. Anthony's wife, very active at Rome for her husband's interests, VII. 268
Funerals. Funeral ceremonies in Egypt, I. 43. At Athens, III. 107

Gabinius, Pompey's lieutenant, subjects part of Syria, VII. 225. He commands there as proconsul, 244. Upon the earnest infinences of Pompey, he re-establishes Ptolemy Auletes upon the throne of Egypt, 246
Gadates, prince of Assyria, submits to Cyrus, II. 103
Gagamela, or Camel's hows, place famous for Alexander's second victory over Darius, II. 398, IV. 476, 485
Gala, Masinissa's father, joins the Carthaginians against the Romans, I. 295
Gallia, or Galo-Grecia, a province of Asia minor, inhabited by the Gauls after their irruption into Greece, V. 317

Galba: Fine saying of that emperor, V. 152
Galky. See Ship.
Games, part of the religion of the ancients, I. lxiii. Solemn games of Greece: The Olympick, the Pythian, the Nemean, the Isthmian, lxv. Rewards granted to the victors in those games, lxvi, lxxvii. Ladies admitted to dispute the prize in the Olympick games, III. 400
Ganymede, Ptolemy's eunuch, suppliants Achillas, and becomes prime minister of Egypt in his place, VII 257. His stratagems against Caesar during his war in Egypt, ibid. &c.
Gaos, admiral to Artaxerxes, revolts against that prince, and on what occasion, III. 417
Garden. Hanging garden of Babylon, II. 13
Gauls. They dispute the passage of the Alps with Hannibal, I. 227, &c. Irruption of the Gauls into Greece, V. 313. Their attempt against the temple of Delphi, 314
Gaza in Palestine, besieged and taken by Alexander, IV. 400. Destruction of Gaza by Alexander Jannaeus, VII 5
Gelanon, king of Argos, II. 282
Ge'a, city of Sicily, III. 178
Gellias, citizen of Agrigentum, his noble use of riches, IV. 5
Gelon possessest himself of supreme authority at Syracuse, III. 71. Reasons that prevent him from aiding the Greeks when attacked by Xerxes, II. 465. He defeats Hamilcar, general of the Carthaginians, I. 143. The Syracusans proclaim him king, 144. III. 75. His wife conduct during his reign, 76, &c. His death, 79. Respect which the Syracusans retained for his memory, ibid. IV. 110
INDEX.

Gelon, son of Hiero, espouses the party of the Carthaginians against the Romans, VII. 100. he dies soon after, ibid.

Genius. Height to which the ancients carried genius, VII. 122

Gentius, king of Illyrium, becomes suspected by the Romans, VI. 302, 304. he makes an alliance with Perseus, 347. he declares against the Romans, and imprisons their ambassadors, 35. the Romans fend the prætor Anicius against him, ibid. Gentius is obliged to throw himself at his feet, and implore his mercy, 353. Anicius sends him to Rome with all his family, ibid.

Geometry. People to whom the invention of that science is attributed, I. 49

Gergis, son of Ariazus, one of the six generals of Xerxes's army, II. 162

Gigis, one of the Paryat's women, confesses the poisoning of Statira, III. 362. she is put to death, ibid.

Gisco, son of Hamilcar, is punished for his father's ill success, and is banished, I. 144

Gisco, Carthaginian, endeavours to suppress the revolt of the mercenaries, I. 201. Spendidus, their general, puts him to death, 205

Gisco endeavours to prevent the Carthaginians from accepting the conditions of peace proposed by Scipio, I. 274

Glabrio (Mar. Aelianus) obtains Bithynia and Pontus for his province, where Lucullus commanded before, VII. 211. his discourse on his arrival augments the licence of Lucullus's troops, 212, &c.

Glaucias, king of Illyrium takes Pyrrhus under his protection, and re-establishes him in his dominions, V. 205

Glaucos, a young Athenian, desirous of having a share in the administration of the publick affairs, III. 444. Socrates, in a conversation, obliges him to own his incapacity for them, ibid. &c.

Glory. Wherein true glory conflicts, V. 91, 598

Gobryas, Assyrian lord, puts himself and family under the protection of Cyrus, II. 101. he puts himself at the head of a body of troops at the siege of Babylon, 139. Gobryas enters into the conspiracy against Smerdis the Magian, 193. his sense of the present given Darius by the Scythians, 397

Gobryas, Persian lord, commands in the army of Artaxerxes at the battle of Cumana, III. 223

God. Answer of Simonidés to a prince who asked him what God was, III. 81. one supreme God acknowledged by Socrates, 448

Gordian, capital city of Phrygia, famous for the chariot to which the Gordian knot was tied, which Alexander cut, IV. 388, 389

Gorgias, officer to Antiochus Epiphanes, marches with Nicæus against Judas Maccabæus, V. 272. his troops are put to flight, 274

Gorgidas, Athenian, joins Pelopidas to expel the tyrants of Thebes, IV. 132

Gorges, siphist, is sent deputy from the Leontines to Athens to demand aid against the Syracusians, III. 175

Gorgo, daughter of Cleomenes: Smart saying of that child, II. 408 Government. Different kinds of government, III. 489, which would would be the most perfect, III. 490. essential point in governing, IV. 96. view and end of all government. III. 489

INDEX

Gracchus (Tiberius) distinguishes himself at the siege of Carthage, I. 323. being tribune of the people; he proposes a law concerning the will of Attalus, and is killed soon after, VI. 501, 522 Grandees. Example how little their friendship is to be relied on, II. 455. blindness too common to the great, 544. mistaken ambition sufficiently common to the great, V. 179, 181. See Princes, Kings.
Granius, river of Phrygia, famous for the victory of Alexander over the Persians, IV. 377
Gratitude: The principal virtue of the Egyptians, I. 34
Greece, Greeks, geographical description of ancient Greece, II. 273. history of Greece divided into four ages, 277, VI. 438. primitive origin of the Greeks, II. 278. different states of which Greece was composed, 281. transmigrations of the Greeks into Asia minor, 286, &c. settlement of the Greeks in Sicily, III. 177. manners and customs of the Greeks, 488, &c. republican government instituted almost universally in Greece, II. 290. Monsieur Boffuet's reflections upon that kind of government, V. 101. love of liberty the peculiar character of the Greeks, VI. 444. different kind of troops that composed the armies of the Greeks, III. 512. ships, and naval forces, 546. people of Greece very warlike in all times, 537. origin and cause of courage and military virtue among the Greeks, 558. religion of the Greeks, I. xxxvi. of the augurs, xlvii. of the oracles, II. famous games and combats of Greece, lxiii. difference of taste of the Greeks and Romans in respect to publick shows, xc. disputes for the prize of wit, shows, and representations of the theatre, xcviii. illustrious men who distinguished themselves most by the arts and sciences amongst the Greeks, II. 342. dialects of the Greeks, 289. See the articles Athenians and Lacedaemonians, for what relates to the wars of Greece with the Persians and Macedonians. Greece becomes a Roman province, VI. 432. reflections upon the causes of the grandeur, decline, and ruin of Greece, 437, &c.
Grypeus. See Antiochus Grypeus.
Gulussa, son of Masinissa, divides the kingdom with his two brothers after his father's death, I. 336
Gyges kills Candaules king of Lydia, whose principal officer he was, and ascends the throne in his stead, II. 58. what Plato says of his ring, 59
Gyldippus. Lacedaemonians, goes to the aid of Syracuse besieged by the Athenians, III. 209. his arrival in Sicily changes the face of things, 211. he obliges the Athenians to surrender at discretion, 238. his fordid avarice fullies the glory of his great actions, 291, 292
Gymnosophik, art of forming the athlete, I. lxix
Gynæceae, or apartments of the ladies amongst the Greeks, I. lxvii

H

Hæmus, mountain between Thrace and Thessaly, VI. 228
Hair of Berenice, V. 391
Haliartus,
INDEX.

Halicortus, city of Bœotia, sides with Perseus, VI. 308. the praetor Lucretius takes and entirely demolishes it, 326

Halicarnassus, city of Doris, II. 276. besieged and taken by Alexander, IV. 385

Halysattes, king of Lydia, II. 60. war of that prince with Cyaxares, 53. he continues the siege of Miletus begun by his father, 60. he raises the siege of that city, and wherefore, ibid.

Hamestris, wife of Teriteuchmes, III. 298. cruelty of that princes, 299

Hannibal commands the army sent by the Carthaginians into Sicily at the requisit of Xerxes, I. 142, II. 451, III. 73. it is defeated by Gelon, tyrant of Syracuse, I. 143, III. 74. his death, I. 143

Hannibal, son of Gyocon, commands the Carthaginian army against Agathocles, and gains a great victory over him, I. 161. he falls alive into the hands of the Syracusans whilst besieging their city, 169. he is put to death, ibid.

Hannibal, furred Barcha, general of the Carthaginians, I. 198. boldness and ability of that general, 199, 200. he commands the army against the mercenaries, 206. and defeats them entirely, 213. he goes to Spain, which he conquers in a short time, ibid. he is killed in a battle, ibid.

Hannibal, furred Rhodanus, a Carthaginian, goes into the camp of Alexander by order of Carthage, I. 172. at his return he is put to death, ibid.

Hannibal, son of Gisygo, is placed at the head of the troops sent by the Carthaginians into Sicily to the aid of the people of Egessa, I. 145. actions of that general in Sicily, ibid. &c. he dies there of the plague, 147

Hannibal commands the Carthaginian fleet, and is defeated by the confull Diumius, I. 179. he besieges the mercenaries in Tunis, 207. he falls into their hands and is crucified, ibid.

Hannibal, furred the Great, at nine years old goes with his father sent to command in Spain, I. 213. he is appointed to command there after Afrubal's death, 216. after several conquests he besieges Saguntum, 217. and takes it, 218. he prepares for his march into Italy, 220. he goes to Cadiz, and with what view, ibid. he begins his march, 221. his expeditions as far as the Rhone, 222. he passes that river, ibid. his march afterwards, 224. he passes the Alps, 226. he enters Italy, 230. he defeats the Romans near the river Ticinus, 231. then at Trebia, 234. he marches to Tuscany, 238. he loses an eye in passing the Appenines, 239. he gains a battle near the lake of Thrafymenus, ibid. he concludes a treaty with Philip, and sends ambassadours to him, V. 543. his conduct in regard to Fabius, I. 242. his manner of extricating himself from the wrong slp he had taken at Cannæ, 246. he gains a famous victory near Cannæ, 248. &c. he sends deputies to Carthage with the news of his victory, and to demand reinforcement, 253. he makes a treaty with Hieronymus, VII. 104. he winters at Capua, I. 255. and suffers the courage of his troops to be enter-
I N D E X.

ened by the luxury of that place, I. 256

Bad success of Hannibal, I. 259. he flies to the aid of Ca-pua, besieged by the Romans, ibid. to make a diversion, he marches suddenly back against Rome, ibid. after various attempts he abandons that enterprise, 260. he is recalled into Africa, 267. he has an interview there with Scipio, 270.
followed by a battle, in which he is defeated, 272. he escapes to Carthage, ibid. he causes a peace to be concluded with the Romans, 273. he undertakes and effects the reformation of the courts of justice and finances at Carthage, 279. pursued by the Romans, he retires to An-tiochus, 282, VI. 66. his discourse to that prince, and the counsels he gives him, I. 286, 288, VI. 80, 104. he goes to Syria and Phenicia to bring ships from thence, 114. he is defeated at sea by the Rhodians, 117. he retires first to the island of Crete, I. 238. then to Prusias, 289, VI. 192. he does that prince great services, I. 289, and VI. 192, 193. betrayed by Prusias, he poisons himself, I. 290, VI. 193. Hannibal's character and prais, I.

HANNIBAL, young Carthaginian, sent to Hieronymus by Hannibal, VII. 104

HANNO, citizen of Carthage, forms the design of making himself master of the commonwealth, I. 160. he is discovered and punished, ibid.

HANNO, Carthaginian, is placed at the head of the troops against Agathocles, I. 165. he is killed in battle, ibid.

HANNO, general of the Carthaginians, is defeated by the Romans near the islands Ægates, I. 195. the Carthaginians give him the command of their troops against the mercenaries, 203.

the command is taken from him, 204. the Carthaginians place him again at the head of their troops, 208. Hanno opposes in vain the undertaking of the second Punic war, 215. Hanno's jealousy of Hannibal, 254.

HARMODIUS conspires against the tyrants of Athens, II. 337. his death, ibid. statues erected in honour of him by the Athenians,

HARMONIA, wife of Themistus, is put to death by order of the people of Syracuse, VII. 110

HARPAGUS, officer of Alyages, is ordered by that prince to make away with Cyrus, II. 175.

HARPAGES, son of Tiribatus, affafinates Artaxerxes by order of Ochus, IV. 200

HECATÆUS, one of Alexander's officers, caufles Attalus to be affa-sinated by that prince's order, IV. 364

HEGEOCHUS, Phyicon's general, defeats the Alexandrians, and takes their general Marseus prisoner, VI. 513

HEGESIPYLA, wife of Miltiades, and mother of Cimon, II. 417

HEGOTORIDES, Thasian, exposes his life for the safety of his city besieged by the Athenians, III. 15

HELENA,
INDEX.

HELena, daughter of Tyndarus, and wife of Menelaus, carried way by Paris, son of Priam king of Troy, II. 285

HELenaus, son of Pyrrhus, accompanies his father to the siege of Argos, V. 360. He enters the city with a body of troops, which occasions a confusion, in which his father perishes, ibid. 361

HELepolis, machine of war invented by Demetrius, V. 238

HELicon of Cyzicum, mathematician, IV. 68

HELIODORUS, prime minister to Selencus Philopator, goes to Jerusalem to take away the treasures of the temple, VI. 276. chalismoment which he receives from God on that account, 237. He poisons Seleucus, and usurps the crown, 238. He is expelled by Eumenes, 239

HELtpolis, city of the Lower Egypt, famous for its temple dedicated to the sun, I. 23. furious actions of Cambyses there, 24

HELLEANICE, Alexander's nurse, IV. 556

HELAMODICA, name of those who preferred in the athletic games of Greece, I. lxxi.

HELLENUS, son of Deucalion king of Thessaly, from whom the Greeks derived their name "Eλλανες, II. 287

HELLESPONT, strait between Europe and Asia, II. 455

HELETS. Origin and condition of the Helots, I. cxxl. cruelties of the Lacedaemonians in respect to them, 154. II. 317. revolt of the Helots against the Lacedaemonians, III. 36

HELVIDIUS PRISCUS: Character of that Roman, IV. 162

HEMEROCHROMI: Runners or couriers amongst the Greeks, VI. 14

HEPHERESTION, Alexander's favourite: Miltake of the captive princecess in respect to him, IV. 414. He receives a wound at the battle of Arbela, 484. Alexander makes him marry Darius's youngest daughter, V. 53. his death, 61. Alexander's esteem for that favourite, IV. 414, V. 61 extraordinary honours which that prince cauæes to be paid him after his death, 65, &c.

HEPTANOMIS, or Middle Egypt: description of it, I 3

HERACLAEA, city of Pontus: Tyrants who governed it, I. clxvii. destruction of that city by Cottus, VII. 194

HERACLAEA in Aeolis, besieged and taken by the consul Acilius, VI. 109, &c.

HERACLEA, wife of Zoippus, of the family of Hiero, is massacred with her children by order of the people of Syracuse, VII.

HERACLIDAE, or descendents from Hercules. They succeed the Atyades in the kingdom of Lydia, II. 57. they seize Peloponnesus, and are soon after driven out of it, 282. they re-enter Peloponnesus, and seize Lacedemon, 286, 288, I. cxxxix. they endeavour to oppose the augmentation of the Athenians, who defeat them in battle, II. 289

HERACLIDES, minister of Seuthes king of Thrace: His peridy, III. 355

HERACLIDES, exilè of Syracuse, comes to the aid of his country against Dionysius, IV. 77. the Siculians choose him admiral, 78. his envy of Dion, ibid. he is obliged to call in Dion to the aid of Syracuse, 85. and to put himself into his hands, 86. Dion restores him the command in chief by sea, 88. Heracleides renews his intrigues against Dion, ibid. Dion is obliged to suffer him to be killed, 90
INDEX

HERACLIDES, Philip's minister, his character, VI. 24. Philip sacrifices him to gain the affection of the Macedonians, 25

HERACLIDES, of Byzantium, is deputed by Antiochus to Scipio Africanus, VI. 123, 124

HERACLIDES, treasurer of the province of Babylon, is banished by Demetrius Soter, VI. 471. he is appointed by Ptolemy, Attalus, and Ariaethes, to prepare Alexander Balas for perforating the son of Antiochus Epiphanes, in order to his resigning instead of Demetrius, 475. he carries him to Rome, where he succeeds in causing him to be acknowledged king of Syria, 476

Herbefts, city of Sicily, IV. 15

HERCULES, son of Jupiter and Alcmena, subjected to Eurystheus by the fraud of Juro, II. 282

HERCULES, son of Alexander and Barfina, V. 114. is put to death by Polyperchon, 208

HERIPPIDAS, Spartan: His too rigid exactness obliges Spithridates to abandon the party of the Lacedaemonians, III. 385

HERMIAS, Carian, is prime minister of Antiochus the Great, V. 480. his character, ibid. 481. he removes Epiphanes, the most able of Antiochus's generals, 485. Antiochus cau ses him to be assassinated, 483

HERMOCRATES, Syracusan, encourages his citizens to defend themselves against the Athenians, III. 202. he is elected general, 203

HERMOLAIUS, officer in the train of Alexander, confpires against that prince, IV. 504. he is discovered and punished, 505

HEROD, Idumean, is made governor of Galilee, VII. 19. he escapes from Jerusalem to avoid falling into the hands of the Parthians, 19. he goes to Rome, and is declared king of Judæa by the senate, 20. he forms the siege of Jerusalem, 21. he goes to Samaria, and espouses Mariamne, ibid. he makes himself master of Jerusalem, and ascends the throne of Judæa, 22

HERODICUS, one of the principal persons of Thessaly: Unhappy fate of that prince and his family, VI. 205

HERODOTUS, Greek historian: His birth, II. 442. applauds which he received at the Olympic games on reading his history there, I. xcv.

HERODOTUS, friend of Demetrius son of Philip, is seized on that prince's account, VI. 220. he is put to the question, and dies in the torments, 230

Heroes. Times most famous for the history of the heroes, II. 284. description of most of the heroes so much boasted of in history, 173, 174. qualities that form the true hero, V. 82

HESIOD, Greek poet, II. 345

HEZEKIAH, king of Judah, is cured miraculously, II. 29. he shews the ambassadors of the king of Babylon his riches and his palace, ibid. God menaces him by his prophet, 30. accomplishment of those threats, 34

HIDARNES, Perian of great quality, Statira's father, III. 297

HIEMPASAI, son of Micipia, king of Numidia, I. 336. Jugurtha cau ses him to be murdered, 338

HIERAX, of Antioch, becomes prime minister to Phyfcon, VI. 496. that prince puts him to death, ibid.

Hier o. brother of Gelon, reigns after him at Syracuse, III. 79. his character, 80. suspicions which he forms against his brother, her, III. 80. he attracts learned men about him, ibid. his goodness to the children of Anaxilaus, 84. his death. ibid.
Hieronyms. H. his birth, VII. 79. he is chosen captain-general of the Syracusan, 80. and soon after elected king, 82. he quits the party of the Carthaginians, and espoufes that of the Romans, 83. I. 177. he aids the first against the mercenaries, 85. his pacifick reign, ibid. 86. he favours agriculture particularly, 87. 88. &c. distinguished proofs which he gives of his attachment to the Romans in the second Punick war, 90. 100. he employs the ability of Archimedes, who makes abundance of machines of war for him for the defence of a place, 95. gallery which Archimedes builds for him, 97. he dies at a great age, much lamented by his people, 100.
Hierocles, father of Hiero, causes his son to be exposed, and then to be brought back to his house, where he educates him with great care, VII. 79.
Hieroglyphicks: Signification of the word. I. 5
Hieronymus, Hiero's grandon, reigns after him at Syracuse, and by his vices causes him to be much regretted, VII. 101. 102. he makes an alliance with Hannibal, 104. he is killed in a conspiracy, 105.
Hierophantes, name given to the person who presided at the ceremony of the feast of Eleusis, I. xliii Himera, city of Sicily; its foundation, III. 178. its destruction, I. 143.
Himilcon, Carthaginian general, comes to Sicily to drive the Romans out of it, VII. 122. he perishes there, 127.
Hipparchus, son of Pisistratus, governs at Athens after his father's death, II. 336. his taste for literature, ibid. he is killed in the conspiracy of Harmodius and Aristogiton, 337.
Hipparion, brother of Dionysius, drives Calliphus out of Syracuse, and reigns there two years, IV. 94.
Hippias, son of Pisistratus, retains the sovereignty after the death of his father, II. 336. he finds means to frustrate the conspiracy formed by Harmodius and Aristogiton, 337. he is compelled to quit Attica, and goes to settle in Phrygia, 339. he takes refuge in Aha with Aramphernes, 342. 409. he engages the Persians in the war against the Greeks, and serves them as a guide, ibid. 425. he is killed at Marathon, fighting against his country, 429.
Hippocrates, famous physician: His great ability, II. 241. his disinterestedness, III. 110.
Hippocrates, native of Carthage, is sent by Hannibal to Hieronymus, and resides at his court, VII. 108. 109. he becomes one of the principal magistrates of Syracuse, 112. he marches to the aid of Leontium, 114. and is reduced to fly, ibid. he, with Epicydes, possest themselves of all authority at Syracuse, 116. he makes war in the field against Marcellus, 122. 127. the plague destroys him and his troops, 127.
Hipponax, satyrick poet, known by his verses against Pupalas and Athens, II. 348.
INDEX.

doms, I. 1. advantages to be derived from the study of history, cxxxvi, IV. 358, V. 587

Holophernes, general for the king of Assyria, marches against the Israelites, and besieges Bethulia, II. 52. Judith cuts off his head, ibid.

Holophernes, supposed brother of Ariarathes, king of Cappadocia, dethrones him, and reigns in his stead, VI. 407, VII. 65. he is driven out by Attalus, and retires to Antioch, 68. he enters into a conspiracy against Demetrius his benefactor, ibid.

Homer, famous poet, II. 342, &c. to what perfection he carried the species of poetry to which he applied himself, 344, 345

Horfe, troops at Athens, III. 510. the horfe, or the knights, a comedy of Aristophanes, I. cx ii

Hosea, king of Samaria, revolts against the king of Assyria, II. 28. he is laden with chains by Salamanfar, and put in prison for the rest of his life, ibid.

Hymenæus, feals celebrated in honour of him at Lacedæmon, II. 499

Hybla, a city of Sicily, III. 178

Hydarnes commands the Persians called the Immortals in the army of Xerxes, II. 462

Hydraeæ, a river of India, V. 23

Hymeræus, brother of Demetrius Phalereus, is delivered up to Antipater, who puts him to death, V. 128

Hyperbolus, Athenian: His character, III. 172. he endeavours to irritate the people against Nicias and Alcibiades, ibid. he is banished by the oligarchism, 173. he dies in a very tragical manner, V. 128

Hyphsicratia, one of the wives of Mithridates: Her masculine courage, VII. 220

Hyrcanians, people in the neighbourhood of Babylonia, subjected by Cyrus, II. 97

Hyrcanus, son of Joseph, is sent by his father to the court of Alexandria, to compliment the king upon the birth of his son Philometor, V. 501, 502. he distinguishes himself at that court by his address and magnificence, 502

Hyrcanus (John) son of Simon, is declared high-priest and prince of the Jews after his father's death, VI. 505. he is besieged by Antiochus Sidetes in Jerusalem, ibid. and surrenders by capitulation, 506. he renders himself absolute and independent, 510. he renews the treaty with the Romans, 515. he augments his power in Judæa, 523. he takes Samaria, and demolishes it, 524. he becomes an enemy to the Pharisees, 527. he dies, ibid.

Hyrcanus, son of Alexander Janneus, is made high-priest of the Jews, VI. 545, VII. 8. after the death of Alexander, he takes possession of the throne, 11. he is obliged to submit to Aristobulus his younger brother, ibid. he has recourse to Pompey, who replaces him upon the throne, 12, &c. he is again dethroned by Pachorus, son of Orodus, and delivered up to Antigonus, who causes his ears to be cut off, 19. the Parthians carry him into the East, ibid. he returns to Jerusalem, where Herod puts him to death, 20

Hystaspes, father of Darius, governor of Persia, II. 192

Hystaspes, second son of Xerxes, is made governor of Bactriana, II.
INDEX

II. 518. his remoteness from court makes way for his brother Artaxerxes to ascend the throne, 547. Artaxerxes undertakes to reduce him, III. 1. and entirely ruins his party, 2, 3.

Hystiaeus, tyrant of Mileus, prevails upon the generals of Ionia not to abandon Darius, then employed in a war with the Scythians, II. 399. Darius grants him a territory in Thrace, where he builds a city, 400. that prince recalls him to court, 401. Hystiaeus secretly supports the revolt of the Ionians, 406. he forms a conspiracy against the government, 412. he is discovered, ibid. he is taken by the Persians, delivered up to Artaphernes, and put to death, 414. character of Hystiaeus, ibid.

IACCHUS. See Bacchus.

Jaddus, high-priest of the Jews, implores the protection of God against Alexander, IV. 450. honours paid him by that prince, 451. his death, V. 147.

Jalysus, founder of Rhodes, represented in a painting by Protagenes, V. 247.

Jamblichus, verse proper for tragedy, I. cx.

Jason, tyrant of Pherae, is declared generalissimo of the Thessalians, IV. 160. death puts a stop to his designs, 161.

Jason supplants his brother Onias, high-priest of the Jews, VI. 241. he is supplant himself by his brother Menelaus, 244. he takes Jerusalem, and obliges Menelaus to retire into the citadel, 248.

Javan, or Ion, son of Japhet, father of all the people known under the name of Greeks, II. 278.

Javelin, exercise of the javelin, I. lxvii.

Iberians, people of Asia, subjected by Pompey, VII. 224.

Ibis, animal adored by the Egyptians, I. 36, 40.

Ictetas of Syracuse, tyrant of the Leontines, cauies the wife and mother-in-law of Dion to be put to death, IV. 93. the Syracusans call in his aid against Dionysius, and elect him their general, 99. he conceives the design of making himself master of Syracuse, ibid. and feizes great part of the city, 100, 102. Timoleon marches against him, and obliges him to live as a private person in the city of the Leontines, 111. Ictetas revolts against Timoleon, who punishes him and his son with death, 112.

Iehucaemon, animal adored in Egypt, I. 40.

Idolatry: Which the most ancient and most general, II. 247. See Religion.

Iдумæans, people of Palestine: Hyrcanus obliges them to embrace Judaism, VII. 2.

Jealousy, or Envy, an inconstable disease of the mind, V. 451. it fulfies the glory of the greatest actions, VII. 217.

Jehonias, or Jehoiachim, king of Judah, is led captive to Babylon, II. 37. he is set at liberty after an imprisonment there of thirty-seven years 41.

Jehoaz, king of Judæa, led captive into Egypt, where he dies, I. 90.

Jehoiakhim is placed by Nebuchadnezzar upon the throne of Judæa in the room of his brother Jehoaz, I. 90. he is conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, II. 34. he revolts against that prince, 36. his death, ibid.

Jerusalem, city of Palestine; I. xxxii. taking of that city by Nebuchadnezzar.
INDEX.

Necah, I. 90. it is besieged by Senacherib, and delivered miraculously, II. 30; it is besieged, and taken by Nebuchadnezzar, 34, 37. its fortifications demolished by that prince, ibid. and rebuilt by order of Artaxerxes, III. 24. Alexander's entrance into Jerusalem, IV. 452. it is besieged and taken by Ptolemy, V. 150. it is taken and plundered by Antiochus Epiphanes, VI. 248, 258. its temple is profaned, 248, 259. it is taken by Antiochus Sidetes, who causes its fortifications to be demolished, 505. Pompey takes Jerusalem by storm, VII. 16. Caesar permits its walls to be rebuilt, which Pompey had caused to be demolished, 19. Herod takes Jerusalem, 22.

Jesus Christ, his kingdom foretold by Daniel, II. 161. contrast between the kingdoms of the world and the kingdom of Christ, 163, 164.

Jews, massacre of the Jews by order of Senacherib, II. 31.

Aversion of the Jews for the Samaritans, 32: captivity of the Jews at Babylon, and its duration, 34, &c. Cyrus's edict for their return to Jerusalem, 157. the rebuilding of their city opposed by the Samaritans, 158, 375. Darius confirms Cyrus's edict in their favour, 376. his edict against the Jews revoked at the solicitation of Esther, 207. the Jews are confirmed in their privileges by Xerxes, 442. and afterwards by Artaxerxes, III. 24. Ochus carries a great number of Jews captive into Egypt, IV. 227. the Jews refuse to submit to Alexander, 450. they obtain great privileges from that prince, 459. they refuse to work at the building of the temple of Belus, V. 72.

Vol. VII.

The Jews settle at Alexandria in great numbers, V. 204. all those who were slaves in Egypt are set at liberty, 319. the Jews submit to Antiochus the Great, VI. 23. cruelties which they suffer from Antiochus Epiphanes, 248, 259, 264, &c. they gain great victories under Judas Maccabæus, first over the generals of that prince, then over those of Antiochus Eupator, and over himself in person, 269, 274, 277, 460, 461, 463. they make peace with Antiochus, 463. they gain new victories over the generals of Demetrius Soter, 472. they are declared friends and allies of the Romans, ibid. they build a temple in Egypt, 478, 479. they revenge themselves on the inhabitants of Antioch, for the evils they had suffered from them, 485, 486. they renew the treaties with the Romans, 489, 495. they are subjected by Antiochus Sidetes, 505. history of the Jews under Antiochus Epiphanes, VII. 1. Alexander Janneus, 4. Alexandra, 7. Aristobulus II. 11. Hyrcanus, 17. Antigonus, 21. the sovereignty over the Jews transferred to a stranger, 22.

Imilcon, son of Hanno, is sent lieutenant to Hannibal on his going to command in Sicily, I. 146. he takes Agrigentum, 147. he puts an end to the war by a treaty with Dionysius, and returns to Carthage, 148. IV. 14. he returns to Sicily at the head of an army, I. 151, IV. 26. the plague spreads in his army, I. 152, IV. 33. he is defeated by Dionysius, ibid. he leaves his troops to the mercy of the enemy, and retires to Carthage, where he kills himself, I. 151. IV. 34.
INDEX.

Immortality of the Soul. See Soul.

Immortals, guards of the Persian kings so called, II. 221

Immunities. See Exceptions.

Imposts. See Tributes or Taxes.

Inachus, king of Argos, II. 282

Inarus, prince of the Libyans, is chosen king by the Egyptians, and supports their revolt against the Persians, III. 19. He treats with Megabyus, general of the Persians, and surrenders himself, 21. He is delivered to the mother of Artaxerxes, and put to death, 22

Incefl, common amongst the Persians, II. 184, 256

Indathyrus, king of the Scythians, attacked by Darius, II. 396. Answer of that prince to Darius, who sent to demand fire and water from him, ibid.

India, region of Asia, divided in two parts, I. xxx, V. 2. manners of its inhabitants, 4. rarities of that country, 5. &c. history of the commerce with that country from Solomon's time to the present, I. 25. Very singular dispute between two Indian women after the death of their common husband, V. 183, 184. Expeditions of Semiramis into India, II. 17. conquest of India by Darius, 403. Then by Alexander, V. 6

Ingratitude punished most severely amongst the Persians, II. 73

Intaphernes, Persian lord: His insolence and punishment, II. 363

Interest of money amongst the Romans, VII. 191

Iolas, second son of Antipater, and cup bearer to Alexander, is suspected of having poisoned that prince, V. 75

Ion, son of Xuthus, who gave his name to Ionia, II. 287

Ion, favourite of Perseus, delivers up that prince's children to Octavius, VI. 371

Jonathan, Jew and Sadducee, brings over Hyrcanus to his feet from that of the Pharisees, VI. 526, 527

Jonathan, brother of Judas Maccabæus, succeeds him in the government of Judæa, VI. 473. He accepts of the high-priesthood from Alexander Bala, and aids that prince against Demetrius Soter, 477. He undertakes to drive the Greeks out of the citadel, which they had in Jerusalem, 484, &c. Demetrius Nicator orders him to attend him upon that affair, 484. Jonathan aids that prince against the people of Antioch, 485. Disgusted by the ingratitude of Demetrius, he declares for Antiochus Theos, 487. He suffers himself to be deceived by Tryphon, who puts him to death, 487, 488

Ionia, province of Asia minor, II. 276. From whom it takes its name, 287

Ionians. Revolt of the Ionians against Darius, II. 406. They burn the city of Sardis, 410. Their party is entirely ruined, 413. They throw off the Persian yoke after the battle of Salamin, and unite with the Greeks from thenceforth, 515

Joseph, son of Jacob, I. 67

Joseph, Onias's nephew, is sent into Egypt to make his uncle's excuse to Ptolemy, V. 400. His credit with Ptolemy, 401. That prince gives him the farm of the revenues of Cœlophyria and Palestine without security, 402

Josiah,
INDEX.

Josiah, king of Judah, marches against Nechao, is defeated, and dies of a wound received in battle, I. 89

Iphicrates, Athenian, is sent to aid Corcyra, IV. 137. He is placed at the head of the Grecian troops in the expedition of Artaxerxes against Egypt, 189. He retires to Athens, where Pharnabæus caueth him to be accused of making the expedition miscarry, 192. The Athenians employ him in the war with the allies, 208, 211. He is accused by Chares, and cited to take his trial, 212. Means which he employs for his defence, ibid., &c. He re-establisheths Perdikkas upon the throne of Macedonia, 253. Praise of Iphicrates, 208. Military discipline which he establisheth amongst the troops, 209

Iphus, city of Phrygia, famous for the victory of Py learners, Caffander, Seleucus, and Lydiamus, over Antigonus and Demetrius, V. 256

Irons attributed to Socrates, III. 451

Isadas, young Spartan; his great courage, IV. 174

Isagoras, Athenian, forms a faction in Athens after the expulsion of the tyrants, II. 341

Ischaris, Spartan; guards an important post during the irruption of the Thébans into Laconia, and distinguishes himself in a peculiar manner, IV. 149

Ile, part of the city of Syracuse; description of it, III. 198

Ismenias, Theban, is made prisoner with Pelopidas, by Alexander of Pheræ, IV. 163. He is delivered by Epaminondas, 167

Isenius, Polemarch of Thebes, is seized by Leontides, and carried prisoner to the citadel, IV. 120. He is condemned and executed, 122

Isocrates, Greek orator: Services which he endeavoured to render the Athenians by his writings, IV. 213, 289. His death, 328

Isocrates, Greek grammarian, is sent prisoner to Rome for having endeavoured to justify the assassination of Ocladius, VI. 474

Istus, city of Cilicia, famous for Alexander's victory over Darius, IV. 401

Isthmian, solemn games of Greece, I. lxv

Italians massacred in Asia minor by order of Mithridates, VII. 154

Ithobal, king of Tyre, when besieged by Nabucodonosor, II. 35

Ithoma, a city of Messenia, famous for the battle fought there between the Messenians and Lacedaemonians. I. cxliv. The inhabitants of that city subjected by the Lacedaemonians, cxix Ituræa, part of Cœloïryia, VII. 2, the Ituræans are obliged by Artobulus to embrace Judaism, ibid.

Juba I. king of Mauritania, is conquered by Cæsar, and kills himself, I. 346

Juba II. son of the former, is led in Cæsar's triumph whilst an infant, I. 346. Augustus restores him the dominions of his father, ibid. Works of learning ascribed to this prince, ibid. 347

Judas, called Maccabæus, third son of Mattathias, is chosen general by his father against Antiochus Epiphanes, VI. 268. He gains several great victories over that prince, 271, 274, 275, 276. He retakes the temple, and dedicates it anew to the service of God, 276. He gains new advantages over the generals of Antiochus Eupator, and G...
INDEX.

over that prince in person, VI. 459, 461, 462. repeated victories of Judas Maccabæus over the generals of Demetrius Soter, 462, 472. he dies in battle fighting gloriously, 473 Jœda, region of Syria, called also Palæstine, I. xxxii

Judith. Jewels: Her courage and boldness, II. 52

Jugurtha, Masinissa's grandson, is adopted by Micipia, and associated with the other children of that prince, I. 338. he seizes the kingdom of Numidia, and puts one of the two princes his brothers by adoption to death, ibid. he attacks the second with open force, 339. besieges him in Circitha, 340. the Romans declare war against him, ibid. Jugurtha frustrates their efforts several times by bribes, ibid. 341. the Romans send Metellus first, and then Marius, against him, who both gain many advantages over him, 342, 343, &c. Jugurtha has recourse to Bocchus his father-in-law, who gives him up to the Romans, 344. he is led in triumph, 345. and afterwards thrown into a deep dungeon, where he perishes miserably, ibid. &c.

Julius is sent deputy by the Romans into Achaia, to appease the troubles there, VI. 425

Junius, conful, is defeated at sea by the Carthaginians, I. 194

Justice, the supreme of virtues, IV. 121, and the principal support of regal authority, III. 372

Juventius Thalna (P.) Roman praetor, marches against Andronicus, VI. 422. he is killed in a battle, ibid.

Kings. Princes. Duties of a King, III. 82, 503, IV. 187, V. 98, 273. qualities essential in a prince; sincerity, truth, and faith to engagements, III. 74, 80, V. 54. application in rendering justice, IV. 339, V. 273, VII. 91. to know how to own faults when they happen to commit them, II. 447. to acquire the affection of subjects, V. 202, 274, 386, 421, 450, 588, to favour arts and sciences, VII. 66, 121. to make commerce flourish in his kingdom, V. 401. not to harbour envy and jealousy, nor open his heart to flattery, I. 292, II. 444, III. 25, V. 49. in what a prince ought to endeavour to distinguish himself from his subjects, II. 169, 171. noble use which he ought to make of his riches, V. 336, &c. a prince is the sword and shield of his dominions, II. 217. the knowledge of the heart of man is of great importance to a prince, IV. 374. temperance is a very estimable virtue in a king, IV. 187. vices odious in a prince, 558. difference between a king and a tyrant, III. 82, IV. 2, VII. 105

L

Lambdon: Fort situated in the neighbourhood of Syracuse, III. 199

Laborosoarchod ascends the throne of Assyria, and is killed soon after, II. 42. bad inclinations and cruelty of that prince, ibid. and 101

Labyinth of Egypt: Description of it, I. 9

Lacedæmon, or Sparta, city of Peloponnesus, capital of Lacedæmonians or Spartans, II. 274

Kings
Kings of Lacedæmonia, II. 284. the Heraclids seize Lacedæmon, where two brothers, Eurysthenes and Procles, reign jointly, 285. the crown remains in those two families, ibid. the Lacedæmonians take Elus, and reduce the inhabitants of that city to the condition of slaves under the names of Heloïs, I. cxl. Lycurgus, legislator of Sparta, cxli. war between the Lacedæmonians and Argives, cxlii. first war between the Lacedæmonians and Meßenians, cxliii. defeat of the Lacedæmonians near Ithôma, cxlvi. they take and destroy Ithôma, and grant peace to the Meßenians, cxlix. second war of the Lacedæmonians and Meßenians, ibid. the Lacedæmonians are defeated, cli. they demand a general of the Athenians, who give them Tyrtaeus, by profession a poet, ibid. by his verses he inspires them with courage, and occasions their gaining a great victory, clii. the Lacedæmonians subject the Meßenians, and reduce them to the condition of Helots, cliii.

The Lacedæmonians deliver Athens from the tyranny of the Pisistratides, II, 339. they undertake to reinstate Hippias, son of Pisistratus, but ineffectually, 341, 416. Darius sends to Sparta, to demand its submission, 425. the Spartans put his heralds to death, 423. a ridiculous superstition prevents the Lacedæmonians from having a share in the battle of Marathon, 425, 431. the honour of commanding the Greeks is decreed to them, 469. three hundred Spartans dispute the pass of Thermopylæ with Xerxes, 472. battle of Salamin, in which the Lacedæmonians have a great share, 484, &c. honours which they render Themístocles after that battle, 492. the Lacedæmonians, in conjunction with the Athenians, cut the army of the Persians in pieces at the battle of Platæa, 501, 502. they defeat the Persian fleet at the same time near Mycale, 513. they are for preventing the Athenians from rebuilding the walls of their city, 519. the haughtiness of Pausanias occasions their losing the command, 525. they send deputies to Athens, to accuse Themístocles as an accomplice in Pausanias's conspiracy, 531.

Earthquake at Sparta, III. 36. sedition of the Helots, ibid. seeds of division between Sparta and Athens, 37. peace is re-established between the two states, 39. jealousy and differences between the Lacedæmonians and Athenians, 53 treaty of peace for thirty years, 56. new causes of complaint and discontent, ibid. open rupture between Sparta and Athens, 64. Peloponnesian war, 99, G. allies of the Lacedæmonians in that war, 100. they ravage Attica, 104. Lacedæmon has recourse to the Persians, 116. its deputies are seized by the Athenians, carried to Athens, and put to death, 117. Plataea besieged and taken by the Lacedæmonians, 121, 137. they abandon Attica to retake Pylos from the Athenians, 139. they are defeated at sea, ibid. Lacedæmonians shut up in the island of Sphakteria, ibid. they surrender at discretion, 145. Expeditions of the Lacedæmonians into Thrace, 154. they take Amphipolis, 155. truce of a year between Sparta and Athens, 157. victory of the Lacedæmonians
INDEX.

cedæmonians over the Atheni-nians near Amphipolis, III. 160. treaty of peace between the two states for fifty years, 163

The war renewed between Sparta and Athens, III. 171. the Lacedæmonians give Alci-biades refuge, 190. by his advice they send Gyippus to the aid of Syracuse, and fortify Decelia in Attica, 203, 213.
the Lacedæmonians conclude a ready with Persia, 252. their fleet is beaten by the Athenians near Cyzicum, 258. they appoint Lyfander admiral, 265. they beat the Athenian fleet near Ephesus, 268. Callicratidas succeeds Lyfander, 270. defeat of the Lacedæmonians near the Arginuæ, 273, &c. they gain a famous victory over the Athenians near Ægolopotamos, 286. they take Athens, 290. and change the form of its goternment, 291. decree of Sparta concerning the use of the money which Lyfander causeth to be carried thither, 292. bafe conduct of the Lacedæmonians in respect to Syracuse, IV. 17.

infamous means which they use for ridding themselves of Alci-biades, III. 301. inhumanity of the Lacedæmonians to the Athenians, who fled to avoid the violence of the thirty ty-nants, 307, &c.

The Lacedæmonians furnish Cyrus the Younger with troops against his brother Artaxerxes, III. 318. they chastise the insolence of the inhabitants of Elis, 367. they undertake, with Agefilus at the head of them, to reinstate the ancient liberty of the Greeks of Asia, 373. expedidions of the Lacedæmonians in Asia, 380. Sparta appoints Agefilus generalissimo by sea and land, 384. league against the Lacedæmonians, 388. they gain a great victory near Ne-mæa, 393, 394. their fleet is defeated by Conon near Cnidos, 395. battle gained by the La-cedæmonians at Coronea, 397.
they conclude a shameful peace for the Greeks with the Perians, 403. they declare war with the Olynthians, IV. 118. they seize the citadel of Thebes by fraud and violence, 120. they receive the Olynthians into the number of their allies, 122

Prosperity of Sparta, IV. 122.
the Lacedæmonians are reduced to quit the citadel of Thebes, 132. they form an ineffectual enterprize against the Piraeus, 134. they are defeated near Targyra, 138. they declare war against the Thebans, 139. they are defeated and put to flight at Lenontra, 143, &c. the Thebans ravage their country, and advance to the gates of Sparta, 149, 151. the Lacedæmonians

implore aid of the Athenians, 155. Sparta besieged by Epaminondas, 173. battle of Man-tinae, in which the Lacedaemonians are defeated, 175. the Lacedæmonians send aid to Tachos, who had revolted against the Persians, 193. enterprize of the Lacedæmonians against Megalopolis, 216. they revolt against the Macedonians, 514.
they are defeated by Antipater,
515. Alexander pardons them,
516

Sparta besieged by Pyrrhus,
V. 553. courage of the Spartan women during that siege, ibid.
354, 355. history of the Lacedæmonians in the reign of Agis, 424 and in that of Cleomenes,
444. Sparta falls into the hands of Antigonus Dofon, 474 se-edition in Sparta appeas'd by Philip, 507. Sparta joins the Ætol-lians against that prince, V. 513. several actions between the Lacedaemonians and Philip, 530, 531. Sparta joins with the Aetolians in the treaty with the Romans, 553. Machanidas becomes tyrant of Sparta, ibid. the Lacedaemonians defeated by Philopæmen near Mantinæa, 582. Nabis succeds Machanidas, 589, his cruel treatment of the Lacedaemonians, ibid. V. 69. Quintius Flamininus besieges Sparta, 73. enterprise of the Aetolians against Sparta, 94. that city enters into the Achaean league, 95. the Spartans cruelly treated by their exiles, 153, 154. war between the Lacedaemonians and Acha- ans, 424. the Romans separate Sparta from the Achaean league, ibid. 425

Character and government of Sparta, II. 292, 307, III. 490. laws inflicted by Lycurgus formed upon those of Crete, II. 293, III 499. senate, II. 294, III. 491. distribution of lands, II. 295. love of poverty, III. 495. gold and silver money banished Sparta, II. 296, 308. publick meals, 297. education of children, 299, 311. barbarous cruelty in respect to them, 314, 315. obedience to which they were accustomed, 312, III. 494. respect which they were obliged to have for age, II. 313. patience and fortitude of the Lacedaemonian youth, 301. profession and exercise of the Lacedæmonians, 303. excessive leisure in which they lived, 316. cruelty of the Lacedæmonians in respect to the Helots, 317. chastity and modesty absolutely neglected at Sparta, ibid. common character of the Lacedæmonians and Athenians, III. 559. causes of the decline of Sparta, 498. different kinds of troops of which the Lacedæmonians armies were composed, 542. manner in which the Lacedæmonians prepared for battle, II. 472. military discipline of Sparta, IV. 147. navy of the Lacedæmonians, II. 310

Lachaeres, Theban, commands a detachment of the army of Ochus in that prince's expedition against Egypt, IV. 228, he forms the siege of Pelusium, and takes it, ibid.

Laconia, province of Peloponnesus, II. 274

Lada, a small island over-against Miletus, II. 413

Ladies: Plutarch composed a treatise to prove the industry and capacity of the ladies, II. 454. happy simplicity of the ladies of antiquity, IV. 495

Lais, famous courtezan, III. 196

Lajus, king of Thebes, his misfortunes, II. 284

Lake of Mæris, I. 10

Lamachus is appointed general with Nicias and Alcibiades in the expedition of the Athenians against Sicily, III. 179. his poverty makes him contemptible to the troops, 195. he is killed at the siege of Syracuse, 208

Lamia, courtezan to Demetrius: Her enormous expences, V. 254. pleasantry of a comic poet in respect to her, ibid.

Lamia, city of Theffaly, famous for the victory of the Athenians over Antipater, V. 121

Lands: Distribution of them instituted by Lycurgus at Sparta, II. 295. reflection upon that partition, 308

Laodice, wife of Antiochus Theos, is repudiated by that prince, V. 377. Antiochus takes her again, 387. she causes him to be poisoned, V. 387. and Seleucus Callinicus to be declared king in his stead, 388. she causes Berenice and her son to be put to death, ibid. Ptolemy puts her to death, 390.
INDEX.

Laodice, daughter of Mithridates king of Pontus, marries Antiochus the Great, V. 482.

Laodice, sister of Demetrius Soter, and widow of Perseus king of Macedonia, is put to death by Ammonius, favourite of Alexander Bala, VI. 480.

Laodice, widow of Ariarathes VI. acts as regent during the minority of six princes her children, VI. 503, VII. 68. she poisons five of them, and prepares to do the same by the sixth, ibid. she is put to death by the people, ibid.

Laodice, sister of Mithridates Eupator, marries first Ariarathes VII. king of Cappadocia, and afterwards Nicomedes king of Bithynia, VII. 68, 69. part which he makes her act at Rome before the senate, 69, 147, 148.

Laomedon, one of Alexander's captains: Provinces which fell to him after that prince's death, V. 112. he is disseised of them by Nicanor, who takes him prisoner, 149.

Laranae, city of Pisidi, revolts against Perdiccas, V. 138, 139. tragic end of that city, ibid.

Larissa, city of Thessaly, II. 275.

Lasthenes, chief magistrate of Olynthus, puts that city into the hands of Philip, IV. 285.

Lasthenes, of Crete, supplies Demetrius Nicator with troops for ascending the throne of Syria, VI. 480. his bad conduct makes that prince commit many faults, 483.

Lathyrus. See Ptolemy Lathyris.

Leaping: Exercise amongst the Greeks, I. lxxvii.

Legion Roman; soldiers of which it was composed, I. 248.

Lelex, first king of Lacedaemonia, II. 284.

Lentiscus, son of Ptolemy, is taken prisoner by Demetrius, and sent back to his father by that prince, V. 225.

Lentulus is sent to Thebes by the Romans, to have an eye over Boeotia, during the war with Perseus VI. 311.

Lentulus, consul, is ordered to reinstate Ptolemy Auletes upon the throne, VII. 239, 240. he is prevented from executing that commision by a pretended oracle of the Sybils, 241.

Leon, Corinthian, defends the citadel of Syracuse against Icetas and the Carthaginians, IV. 107.

Leon, Athenian, is sent deputy with Timagoras to the court of Peria, and accuses his colleague at his return, IV. 159.

Leontatus, one of Alexander's captains: Provinces that fell to him after that prince's death, V. 112. he marches to the aid of Antipater besieged in Lamia, 121. he is killed in battle, ibid.

Leonidas, governor of Alexander, IV. 354.

Leonidas I. king of Sparta, defends the pass of Thermopylae with unparalleled bravery against the innumerable army of Xerxes, II. 470. he is killed there, 474. the Lacedaemonians erect him a magnificent monument, II. 475
INDEX

LEONIDAS II. reigns at Sparta jointly with Agis, V. 424. He opposes the designs of that prince, 431. He is divested of the sovereignty, 433. He escapes to Tegae, 434. He is recalled, and replaced upon the throne, 437. He lays snare for Agis, 439. And puts him to death, 441, 442. He obliges the wife of that prince to marry his son Cleomenes, 443. Death of Leonidas, 445. His character, 425

LEONTIDES, Polemarch of Thebes, puts the citadel of that place into the hands of the Lacedaemonians, IV. 119. He imprisons Ismenius, who was his opponent, 120. He sends persons to Athens to affallinate the principal exiles, 125. Pelopidas, at the head of the conspirators, kills him, 131

LEONTIVM, city of Sicily, III. 178

LEONTIUS, Philip's general, insults Aratus grovelly at a feast, V. 530. He is security for the fine laid on Megaleas upon the same account, ibid. Philip takes the command of his troops from him, and puts him to death, 534, &c.

LEOSTHENES, Athenian, informs Athens of Alexander's death, and animates them to throw off the Macedonian yoke, V. 117. He is placed at the head of the Greeks allied against Antipater, ibid. 118. His glorious exploits, 120. He receives a wound at the siege of Lamia, 121. And dies soon after, 122

LEOTYCHIDES, king of Lacedaemonia, in conjunction with Xenippus the Athenian, gains a famous victory over the Persians near Mycale, II. 513

LEOTYCHIDES, son of Timæus, wife of Agis, passes for the son of Alcibiades, and for that reason is excluded the throne, III. 197, 368

LEPTINUS, brother of Dionysius, is put to flight by the Carthaginians, with the fleet under his command, IV. 28. He is banished, 45. And soon after recalled, ibid. He kills Callippus, Dion's murderer, 92. He surrenders himself to Timoleon, who sends him to Corinthus, 111

LEPTINUS, Syrian, kills Octavius the Roman ambassador, VI. 469. Demetrius delivers him up to the senate, 474

LEPTINUS, Syracusan, Hiero's father-in-law, VII. 80

LEPTOS, island of Greece, II. 276. Revolt of that island against the Athenians, III. 175. The Athenians reduce it to its former obedience, 130, &c.

Letters. Invention of letters brought into Greece by Cadmus, I. 74

LEUCON, king in the Bosporus; mutual generosity between that prince and the Athenians, IV. 247

LEUSAS, small town of Bœotia, famous for the victory of the Thebans over the Lacedaemonians, IV. 113, &c.

LEVINUS, Roman conful, defeated by Pyrrhus, V. 330

LEVINUS (M. Valerius) is sent into Greece and Macedonia in quality of praetor, to oppose the enterprises of Philip, V. 549. Enemies he excites against that prince, ibid, &c.

LEOTYCHIDES is elected king of Sparta in the room of Demaratus, II. 423

LEWIS XV. king of France. Glorious testimony which that prince renders the French nation, VI. 159, &c.

Libra-
INDEX.

Library. Famous libraries of antiquity: at Alexandria, I. 27, V. 286, 287. at Athens, II. 336 at Pergamus, VI. 408

Libya, part of Africa, VI. 545. war of Libya, or of the mercenaries, I. 199

Licinius, consul, is sent into Macedonia against Perseus, VI. 303, 311. he encamps near the river Peneus, 316. he is defeated in a battle, 319, &c, and afterwards gains some advantage over Perseus, 326

Licinius (C.) the consul's brother, commands the Italian cavalry in his brother's army, VI. 318.

Ligoras, one of the generals of Antiochus the Great, makes that prince master of the city of Sardis, V. 500

Liguria, province of Italy, VI. 413. its inhabitants subjected to the Marcellians by the Romans, ibid.

Lilybaemon, city of Sicily, besieged by the Romans, I. 192

Lines of circumvallation and contravallation amongst the ancients, III. 123

Lioness, Loena or Leona, name of a courtezan. Statue erected in honour of her by the Athenians, II. 340

Lissus, city of Illyria: Siege and taking of that city by Philip, V. 549

Livius, consul, is sent into Cilpine Gaul, to oppose the entrance of Afdrubal into Italy, I. 262. he defeats that general in a great battle, 264, &c.

Loans. Law concerning them among the Egyptians, I. 32, 79. in what manner such as lived upon borrowing were considered among the Persians, II. 207

Lotus, an Egyptian plant of which they made bread, I. 57

Love. Care of the ancients to avoid admitting any thing into their dramatick poems relating to love, I. cix. force of which that passion is capable, V. 137, &c.

Conjugal love. Model of it, V. 439

Lucretius, praetor, commands the Roman fleet sent against Perseus, VI. 311. he besieges Hallartus, a city of Bœotia, takes and demolishes it entirely, 326

Lucullus commands the Roman fleet sent against Mithridates, and gains two great victories over that prince, VII. 168. he is elected consul, and charged with the war against Mithridates, 181. he obliges that prince to raise the siege of Cyzicum, 183. and defeats his troops, 184. he gains a complete victory over him, 187. and obliges him to take refuge with Tigranes king of Armenia, 189. he sends an ambassador to demand Mithridates, 190. he regulates the affairs of Asia, ibid. &c. he declares war against Tigranes, 192. and marches against him, 195. he besieges Tigranocerta, 196. he gains a great victory over Tigranes, 201. and takes Tigranocerta, 202. he gains a second victory over the joint forces of Mithridates and Tigranes, 208. his army refuses to obey him, 209. 211. Pompey is sent to command in his stead, 213. Lucullus returns to Rome and receives the honour of a triumph, 218. his character, 212. means which he used for acquiring the knowledge of the art of war, 168

Lucif...
INDEX.

Luftania, part of the ancient Spain,
I, 138

Lucatius, consul, defeats the fleet of the Carthaginians, and puts an end by that victory to the first Punic war, I. 195, &c.

Luxury. Fatal effects of luxury amongst the ancients, II. 260, &c. almost always attended with the ruin of states, 261, II. 390,
III. 96

Lyctidas, Athenian, is for having the proposal of Mardonius heard, II. 498. he is floned,
ibid.

Lydia, province of Asia minor, I.
xxxi. it is declared free by the Romans, VI. 337, 395

Lyciscus, deputy from the Acananians, endeavours to engage the Lacedaemonians in Philip's party, V. 552

Lyciscus, Aetolian, is accused of having treated those with great cruelty, who would not elpoufe the Romans against Perseus, VI.
396. P. Aemilius acquits him,

Lycon, Athenian, commander of the Grecian troops in the army of Pithithes, is brought into the views of Tissaphernes, whom he joins, III. 150

Lycortas, Polybius's father, is sent ambassador by the Achæans to Ptolemy Epiphanes, VI. 168, 189. he is elected general of the Achæans, and avenges Philopeum's death, 189. he is deputed a second time to Ptolemy,

Lycurgus, son of Eunomus, king of Sparta, governs the kingdom as guardian to Charilaus his nephew, II. 292. he endeavours to reform the government of Sparta, and makes several voyages with that view, 293. on his return he changes the form of the government, ibid. &c.
he goes to Delphi to consult the oracle, and dies voluntarily by abstaining from food, 305. re-fections upon Lycurgus's death, ibid. &c.

Lycurgus, Spartan, corrupts the Ephori, and caufer himself to be elected king of Sparta, V.
513. Chilo's attempt against him, 518. Lycurgus flies into Aetolia to escape the Ephori, and is soon after recalled, 537

Lydia, country of Asia minor, I.
xxxi. king of Lydia, II. 57.
it is subje&ed by Cyrus, 120.
the manner in which the Lydi-ans contracted alliances, 54

Lying. How much abhorred amongst the Persians, II. 207

Lycneus, king of Argos, II. 282

Lyncetes Alexander is convicted of a conspiracy against Alexander the Great, and put to death, IV. 533

Lysandra, Ptolemy's daughter, maries Agathocles son of Lysi-machus, V. 304. after the murder of her husband she retires to Seleucus, and engages him to make war against Lysimachus,
ibid.

Lysander is appointed admiral by the Lacedaemonians, III.
265. he becomes very powerful with Cyrus the Younger, 267.
he beats the Athenian fleet near Ephesus, 268. his envy of Calicratidas sent to succeed him, 271. he commands the fleet of the Lacedaemonians a second time, 282. and gains a famous victory over the Athenians at Egospotamos, 284, &c. he takes Athens, 289, &c. and etirely changes the form of the government, 291. he returns to Sparta, and sends thither before him all the gold and silver taken from the enemy, ibid. he is sent to Athens to re-eslblisb the thee tyransts, 308. he stranges abuses his power, 311. he suffers
fers the Grecian cities in Asia minor to condecrate altars to him, III. 312, upon the complaint of Pharabatus he is recalled to Sparta, 314. Lyfander accompanies Ageilaus into Asia, 373. he quarrels with him, 376. and returns to Sparta, ibid. his ambitious designs for changing the succession to the throne, 377. he is killed before Haliartus, which he was going to besiege, 390. some time after his death, the plot he had formed against the two kings is discovered, 400. Lyfander’s character, 272, 391, &c.

Lyfander is elected one of the Ephori at Sparta by the favour of Agis, V. 429. he endeavours to make the people receive the ordinances of that excellent young king, ibid. 430

Lysiades, tyrant of Megalopolis, renounces his power upon the remonstrances of Aratus, and makes his city enter into the Achæan league, V. 423. the Achæans make him their captain-general three times successively, and then expel him, ibid. he is killed in battle, 447

Lyias, kinsman of Antiochus Epiphanes, is made governor by that prince of part of his dominions, and preceptor to Antiochus Epiphanes, VI. 271. Antiochus gives him the command of the army against the Jews, ibid. he is defeated by Judas Maccabæus, 277. he poises himself of the regency during the minority of Antiochus Eupator, 458. the government of Celesyria and Palelne is given to him, 459. he is defeated by Judas Maccabæus, 461. he makes peace with the Jews, 463. he is delivered up to Demetrius Soter, who puts him to death, 471

Lyias, one of the Athenian generals, who defeated the Lacedæmonians near the islands Arginae, and at their return were condemned to die, III. 274, 280

Lyias of Syracus, Greek orator, goes to settle at Thurium, III. 92. he raifes five hundred men to aid the Athenians against the tyrants, 307. he carries Socrates a discurso for his defence, 457. character of Lyias’s style, ibid.

Lyssicles commands the Athenian army at Cheronæa, and is defeated by Philip, IV. 325

Lyssimachia, a city of Thrace, VI. 62

Lyssimachus, one of Alexander’s captains, is expofed by order of that prince to a furious lion that he kills, IV. 564. provinces which fell to him after Alexander’s death, V. 112. he enters into a league with Ptolemy Seleucus and Callander, against Antigonus, 194. treaty of peace between those princes, which is immediately broken, 207. Lyssimachus, Ptolemy, Callander and Seleucus, against Antigonus and Demetrius, 254, 255. they divide Alexander’s empire amongst them, 258. alliance of Lyssimachus with Ptolemy, 262. he takes Macedonia from Demetrius, 272. and divides it with Pyrrhus, 275. he obliges Pyrrhus soon after to quit it, 276. he marches against Seleucus, gives him battle, and is killed, 307

Lyssimachus, son of Aristides, his poverty, V. 246

Lyssimachus, Alexander’s preceptor, accompanies that prince in his expeditions, IV. 430

Lythelia, a marsh near Syracus, III. 199

Lythritana, comedy of Aristophanes; extract from it, I. cxv

MAC-
INDEX.

M.

MACHAIDAS becomes tyrant of Sparta, V. 554. he endeavours to subject Peloponnesus, 582. Philopomen marces against him, ibid. Machanidas is defeated and killed in battle, 585, 586.

MADATES, governor of the country of the Uxii for Darius, refuses to surrender to Alexander, IV. 499. that prince subdues and forgives him, ibid. MAGAS, governor of Cyrenaica and Lityba, revolts against Ptolemy Philadelphus, and causes himself to be declared king of those provinces, V. 368. he causes overtures of accommodation to be made to that prince, and dies during the negotiation, 374.

MAGAS, brother of Ptolemy Philopator, is put to death by his order, V. 492.

MAGO employed in the divine worship of the Persians, II. 251. their religion, 253.

Magistrate. Duty of a magistrate, VII. 141, 142.

Magnesia, city of Caria in Asia minor, I. xxxi. Artaxerxes gives the revenues of that city to Themistocles for his subsistence, III. 7.

MAGO, Carthaginian general, is sent into Sicily to make war against Dionysius the Elder, IV. 27. after various efforts he concludes a peace with that tyrant, 35. he loses a great battle, and is killed in it, I. 154.

MAGO, the former's son, commands the army of the Carthaginians in Sicily, and gains a great victory over Dionysius the elder, I. 155. the Carthaginians place him at the head of their troops in Sicily against Dionysius the Younger, 157. IV. 107. he shamefully abandons the conquest of Sicily, I. 157. IV. 108. he returns to Carthage, and kills himself through despair, I. 158, IV. 109.

MAGO, Carthaginian general, is placed at the head of the fleet sent to aid the Romans against Pyrrhus, I. 172. he goes to Pyrrhus in order to found his designs in respect to Sicily, 173.

MAGO, Hannibal's brother, carries the news of that general's victory over the Romans at the battle of Cannae to Carthage, I. 253.

MAGO, Carthaginian general, is taken prisoner in Sardinia, I. 258, 259.

MAGOSA, city of India, besieged and taken by Alexander, V. 8.

MAHARBAI, Carthaginian officer, endeavours to persuade Hannibal.
INDEX.

Mahomet. Vulgar report concerning his tomb, V. 383

Malli, a people of India; their war with Alexander, V. 35. they submit to that prince, 38

Mamertines, people originally of Italy: They seize Messina, city of Sicily, I. 175. they are defeated by Pyrrhus, V. 345. a division arises amongst them, which occasions the first Punic war, I. 176, VII. 82

Man. Wherein the science of knowing mankind consists, III. 340. men are the same in all ages, 342

Manasseh, king of Judah, is put in chains by the generals of Esarhaddon, and carried captive to Babylon, II. 32. he obtains his liberty, and returns to Jerusalem, ibid.

Mancinus (L.) the consul Piso's lieutenant, engages rashly in a poll, from whence Scipio happily extricates him, I. 314

Mandana, daughter of Alyages, king of the Medes, is given in marriage to Cambyses king of Persia, II. 56. she goes to Media, and carries her son Cyrus with her, 74. she returns into Persia, 77

Mandanis, an Indian philosopher, refuses to follow Alexander in his train, V. 27, 28

Mandroclides, young Spartan, supports the party of Lyfander the Ephors through zeal for the publick good, V. 430

Manethon, Egyptian priest; author of the history of the Dynafties of Egypt, I. 62

Mania, wife of Zenis, is continued in the government of Eo- lia, after the death of her husband, and causes herself to be admired for her conduct, III.

Manlius (M.) consul, is sent against Carthage in the beginning of the first Punic war, I. 365

Manlius, tribune of the people, prepares a decree for appointing Pompey to command the armies against the kings, Mithridates and Tigranes, VII. 213

Manius Curius, consul, gains a great victory over Pyrrhus, and obliges him to quit Italy, V. 349

Manius Aculus, consul, terminates the war against Aithiopicus, VI. 503. and enters Rome in triumph, 504

Manlius (L.) is appointed consul with Regulus, I. 180. they jointly gain a great victory over the Carthaginians near Ecnoma in Sicily, ibid. they go to Africa, ibid. Manlius is recalled, 181

Maninea, city of Arcadia, famous for the victory of Epaminondas over the Lacedaemonians, and for that of Philopoemen over Machaeridas tyrant of Sparta, IV. 179, V. 582

Maracanda, capital city of Sogdiana, submits to Alexander, IV. 538

Marathon, small city of Attica, famous for the victory of the Athenians over the Persians, II. 424

Marcellus (M.) consul, is sent into Sicily to appease the troubles there, VII. 114. actions of Marcellus in Sicily, 115. he forms the siege of Syracuse, 116. the considerable losses of men and ships, by the dreadful machines of Archimedes, obliges him to turn the siege into a blockade, 120. he undertakes several expeditions in Sicily, 123.
he makes himself master of Syracuse by means of his intelligence in it, VII. 124, &c. he abandons the city to be plundered, 132. honours which he pays to the memory of Archimedes, ibid. Marcellus, at first as prætor, and afterwards as consul, gains several advantages over Hannibal, I. 256

MARIUS (L.) Roman knight, prefers Spain to the Romans by his valor, I. 262

MARIUS, ambassador of the Romans in Greece, has an interview with Perseus near the river Peneus, VI. 306. he returns to Rome, 308. he is sent again into Greece, to regulate affairs there, 310, 311

MARIUS PHILIPPUS (Q.) consul, is charged with the war against Perseus, VI. 329. he sets out from Rome, and advances towards Macedonia, 330. after great fatigues he penetrates into Macedonia, and takes several cities there, 331, &c.

MARODONIUS, son-in-law of Darius, enters Macedonia with an army, II. 415. his ill success obliges Darius to recall him, ibid. he gives Xerxes flattering counsels which induce him to invade Greece, 443. Xerxes chuses him one of his generals, 461. that prince leaves him with a numerous army to reduce Greece, 490. he caues very advantageous offers to be made to the Athenians, which are rejected, 496. he enters Athens, and burns what had escaped of it, when taken the year before, 499. he is defeated, and killed at the battle of Platea, 504

MARE of Phidolas, I. xc

MARAONEA, city of Thrace. Cruel treatment of its inhabitants by Philip, VI. 180

Marriages. Laws concerning them instituted at Athens and Sparta, II. 328, III. 301

MARIAMNE, granddaughter of Ariabbolus, marries Herod the Idumean, VII. 29

MARIUS, lieutenant under Metellus, supplants that general, and caues himself to be appointed general for terminating the war with Jugurtha in his stead, I. 343. he gets Jugurtha into his hands, and makes him serve as an ornament of his triumph, 345, &c.

MARIUS (M.) Roman senator, is sent by Sertorius to the aid of Mithridates, VII. 179. he is taken by Lucullus and put to death, 184

MARSEILLIANS. Their embassy to Rome, VI. 413. origin of the Marseillians, ibid. they settle in Gaul, 414. wisdom of their government, 415. their attachment to the Romans, 418. they obtain grace of the Romans for Phocaea, which had been condemned to be destroyed, 503

MASINissa, king of Numidia, epoules the party of the Romans against the Carthaginians, I. 266, 302. he aids the Romans in the war against Perseus, VI. 303, &c. he marries Sophonisba, and is soon obliged to send her poison, I. 296. contests between Masinissa and the Carthaginians, 297. he defeats them in a battle, 300. he dies, and at his death appoints Scipio Æmilianus guardian of his children, 313

MASTITUS, son of Darius and Atossa, is one of the six commanders of the army of Xerxes, II. 461. tragical death of Masitus and his children, 515, &c.

MASSIVA, Numidian prince, is murdered in the midst of Rome by Jugurtha's orders, I. 341, 342
INDEX.

Mastanabal, Masinissa's son, shares the kingdom of Numidia with his two brothers, after the death of their father, I. 336

Mattaniah is placed upon the throne of Judah in the room of his nephew Jeconias, II. 37

Mattathias, Jew, of the sacerdotal race, refuses to obey the ordinances of Antiochus, VI. 262. he retires with his family into the mountains to avoid the persecution, ibid. death of Mattathias, 268

Matho, in concert with Spendius, causes the mercenaries to revolt against the Carthaginians, I. 201. he is placed at their head, 202. he takes Hannibal prisoner, and causes him to be hanged up in the room of Spendidus, 207. he is taken by the Carthaginians, who execute him, 208, 209

Mausolus, king of Caria, enters into a conspiracy against Artaxerxes, IV. 197. he subjects the Rhodians, and the people of Cos, 218. his death, 219. honour paid to his memory by Artemis his wife, ibid.

Mazarus, Macedonian lord, is appointed governor of the citadel of Sula by Alexander, IV. 493

Mazæus, governor of Memphis for Darius, abandons that city to Alexander, IV. 463. he commands the horde in the army of Darius at the battle of Arbela, 483. he surrenders himself, and the city of Babylon, to Alexander, 488. that prince gives him the government of Babylonia, 489

Medias: Publick ones instituted at Crete and Sparta, II. 297, III. 501

Mecenas, favourite of Augustus, and patron of the learned, III. 83

Medea, her means to escape the pursuit of her father, VII. 187

Medes, ancient people of Asia, inhabiting Media, II. 43. history of the kingdom of the Medes, ibid. empires of the Medes and Persians united, 156. revolt of the Medes against Darius Nothus, III. 153. that prince obliges them to return to their duty, ibid. manners of the Medes, II. 74. manner in which they contrived alliances, 54

Media, kingdom of upper or greater Asia, I. xxx. description of that kingdom by Polybius, V. 592

Medicine. Origin and antiquity of medicines, II. 239

Medon, son of Codrus, is placed at the head of the commonwealth of Athens, under the title of Archon, II. 284

Megabates, noble Persian, occasions the miscarrying of the enterprize of the Persians against Naxos through jealousy of Arislagoras, II. 405

Megabyzus, governor of Thrace for Darius, occasions the permission that prince had given Hysliæus to build a city in Thrace to be revoked, II. 401. he sends deputies to demand earth and water of Amyntas, ibid. 402. insolvency of those deputies at the court of Amyntas, and revenge taken of them by the sons of that prince, ibid.

Megabyzus, son of Zopyrus, is one of the six generals of the army of Xerxes, II. 462. he discovers the plot formed by Artabanus against Artaxerxes, 543. he is charged by that prince with the war against the revolted Egyptians, III. 20. he subjects the Egyptians, and promises to spare their lives, 21. Megabyzus, in despair on seeing the Egyptians put to death con.
INDEX.

contrary to the faith of treaty, revolts against Artaxerxes, III. 22, he defeats two armies sent against him by that prince, ibid. he is restored to favour, and returns to court, ibid. Artaxerxes's jealousy of Megabyzus at an hunting-march, 23. death of Megabyzus, ibid.

Mégaceles, son of Alcmeon, puts himself at the head of one of the factions that divided Athens in Solon's time, II. 332. his marriage with Agorista, daughter of Chithenes, ibid. he drives Pisistratus out of Athens, and soon after recalls him, 334. he is obliged to quit Athens, 335 Mégaceles, friend of Pyrrhus, V. 329. that prince in a battle gives his mantle and arms to Mégaceles, and disguises himself in his, 330. Mégaceles is wounded and unhorsed in the battle, ibid.

Mégadates is appointed viceroy of Syria by Tigranes, and governs that kingdom fourteen years, VI. 536. Tigranes recalls him from thence, VII. 207 Mégaleas, Philip's general, devotes himself entirely to Apelles, that prince's minister, V. 522, 531. he inflicts Aratus, in concert with Leonidas, at the breaking up of a feast, 530. Philip imprisons him, and then sets him at liberty upon giving security, ibid. his bad designs against Philip are discovered, 535, he kills himself to avoid a trial and the execution of sentence upon him, ibid. 535 Mégalomé, city of Arcadia, IV. 216. Aratus makes it enter into the Achaean league, V. 423 Mégara, name of one of the quarters of the city of Corinth, I. 325 Mégara, city of Achaia, its foundation, II. 283. that city enters into the Achaean league, V. 417 Vol. VII.

Mégistones, Lacedæmonian captain, is sent by Cleomenes to the aid of Argos, and is killed fighting in that city, V. 457 Mélitùs, Athenian orator, accuses Socrates, III. 456. success of that accusation, 465. he is condemned to die, 466 Mêlon, Theban, is appointed Bœotarch with Pelopidas and Charon, IV. 132 Mémnon, Rhodian, reinflated in the favour of Ochus, against whom he had taken arms, IV. 230, 231. he endeavours to prevent Darius's generals from fighting the battle of the Granicus, 377. he throws himself into Miletus, and defends that place against Alexander, 384. he defends the city of Halicarnassus against that prince, 385. he transports the inhabitants of that city to the island of Cos, ibid. he advises Darius to carry the war into Macedonie, 389. that prince gives the execution of that enterprize to him, and makes him generalissimo, ibid. Mémnon besieges Mitylene, and dies before that place, 392 Mémnon, Mémnon's father in Thebes. Wonders related of it, I. 3 Memphi, city of Egypt: Its foundation, I. 66. taking of that city by Cambyses, II. 179, 180. and afterwards by Alexander, IV. 463 Mëmphi, son of Phýscon and Cleopatra, is murdered by his father, cut in pieces, and sent to his mother, VI. 512 Ménander, Athenian, is made colleague to Nicias, general in Sicily, III. 216. he forces that general to engage in a sea-fight, in which he is worsted, 222, 223. is partly the cause of the defeat of the Athenians near Ægospotamos, 283 H A Ménander,
INDEX.

MENANDER, comick poet, change which he introduced in comedy, I. cxxi

MENANDER, one of Alexander's captains: Provinces that fell to him after that prince's death, V. 112

MENES, city of Egypt, IV. 195. a prince of that city disputes the crown with Neætanæus, ibid. he is defeated and taken prisoner by Agesilaus, 196

MENCREATES, ridiculous vanity of that physician, IV. 342

MENELAUS, Ptolemy's brother, is defeated by Demetrius, and obliged to retire into Salamis, V. 222. he surrenders himself at discretion to Demetrius, who sends him to his brother without ransom, 225

MENELAUS supplants Jason his brother, high-priest of the Jews, and obtains his office, VI. 244. Jason drives him out of Jerusalem, 248. Antiochus reinstates him in the high-priesthood, 249.

MENES, or Milraim, first king of Egypt, I. 64

MENON commands the Theflalian troops of Cyrus's army in that prince's expedition against his brother Artaxerxes, III. 319. Tissaphernes seizes him with the other Greek generals by treachery, and puts him to death, 341. Menon's character, 343

MENOSTANES, nephew of Artaxerxes Longimanus, is defeated and put to flight by Megabylus, III. 22

MENOR, Rhodian, is sent by Neætanæus into Phænicia to support the rebels there, IV. 223. he is confounded on the approach of Oechus, 225. he puts the city of Sidon into that prince's hands, 226. Oechus gives him the command of a detachment of his army against Egypt, 228. Mentor's actions in Egypt, 229. Oechus makes him governor of all the coast of Asia, and declares him generalissimo of all the troops on that side, 230. Mentor's conduct in his government, 231

MENYLLUS commands the Macedonian garrifon which Antipater puts into Munychia, V. 126. Caffander takes the command of that fortress from him, 155

MERCENARIES. War of the mercenaries against the Carthaginians, I. 199

MERCURY, Egyptian, to whom Egypt was indebted for the invention of almost all the arts, I. 69

MERICUS, Spaniard, delivers up one of the gates of Syracuse to Marcellus in the night, VII. 131

MERMNADAE, race of the kings of Lydia, II. 58

MEROBAECH-BALADAN, king of Babylon, sends ambafadors to Hezekiah, to congratulate him upon the recovery of his health, II. 26

MERCAUD, daughter of Cyrus, becomes wife of her brother Cambyses, II. 184. tragical death of that princes, 185

MUSABATES, enun, cuts off the head and hand of Cyrus the Younger by order of Artaxerxes, III. 328. punishment inflicted on him by Paresias, 360, 361

MESRAIM. See MENES.

MESSINGERS, or Letter-carriers, established by the university of Paris, II. 215

MESSINIA, a country of Peloponnesus, I. cxliii

MESSENIANS. First war between the Messenians and Lacedæmonians, I. cxliii. the Messenians defeat the army of the Lacedæmonians near Ithoma, cxliv, &c. they submit to the Lacedæmonians, cxlix. second war between
INDEX.

between the Messenians and Lacedaemonians, I. cxli. the Messenians are at first victorious, cli. then defeated, cliii. they are reduced to the condition of the Helots, ibid. they are reinstated by the Thebans, IV. 152. troubles between the Messenians and Achaeans, VI. 186. the Messenians put Philopæmen to death, 189. they are subjected by the Achaeans, 191, 192. fault of the Messenians which occasioned all their misfortunes. IV. 152

MESSINA, or MESSANA, city of Sicily, I. 175

METELLUS (L.) consul is charged with the war against Jugurtha, I. 342. he is supplanted by Marius, 343. he enters Rome in triumph, 344

METELLUS (Q. Caecilius) Roman prætor, defeats Andriscus, VI. 423. and sends him prisoner to Rome, ibid. he reduces another adventurer, named Alexander, ibid.

Methone, city of Thrace, destroyed by Philip, IV. 273

Meston, astronomer, counterfeits the madman, and wherefore, III. 176

METRODORUS of Scephis goes ambassadour for Mithridates to Tigranes, VII. 196. Mithridates puts him to death, ibid.

METRODORUS, painter and philosopher, is given to Paulus Aemilius by the Athenians for a tutor to his sons, VI. 377

MICIPSA succeeds his father Masinissa in the kingdom of Numidia, I. 336. he adopts Jugurtha his nephew, and makes him co-heir with the rest of his children, 338. Micipsa's death, ibid.

MICYTHUS, guardian of the children of Anaxilaus. Prudence of his administration, III. 84.

MIDIAS, son-in-law of Mania, affinates his mother-in-law and her son, in order to posses himself of her riches and government, III. 505. he is deprived of them by Dercyllidas, ibid.

Miletus, city of Ionia, II. 413. cruelties acted by Lyseander at Miletus, III. 313. Mileus besieged and taken by Alexander, IV. 383, 384

Milo of Crotona, famous athlete, defeats the army of the Sybarites, and destroys their city, III. 92. extraordinary strength of that combatant, 97. his voracity, 98. his death, ibid.

MILTIOCITUS, Thracian, abandons the Greeks after the battle of Cunaxa, and surrenders himself to Artaxeres, III. 335

MILTIADES, Athenian tyrant of the Thracian Cheroneus, accompanies Darius in his expedition against the Scythians, and is of opinion that satisfaction ought to be made them, II. 398. 399. an irruption of the Scythians into Thrace obliges him to abandon the Cheroneus, whether he returns soon after, 402. he settles at Athens, 418. he commands the army of the Athenians, and gains a famous victory at Marathon over the Persians, 425. &c. moderate reward given him by the Athenians, 432. he sets out with a fleet to reduce the revolted islands, and has ill success in the isle of Paros, 434. he is cited to take his trial, and has a great fine laid upon him, ibid. not being able to pay it, he is put in prison, and dies there, ibid.

MINA, Greek money: Its value, III. 133

MINDARUS, Spartan admiral, is defeated and killed in battle by Alcibiades, III. 259

H h 2 Minerva,
INDEX.

Minerva, goddess, I. xxxvi. famous feast at Athens in honour of her, ibid.

Minister. Product of mines was the principal riches of the ancients, I. 119

Minister. Wife lessons for a minister, II. 210, &c. III. 322, 387

Minos, first king of Crete, III. 499. laws instituted by him in his kingdom, ibid. &c. hatred of the Athenians for Minos, 507. cause of that hatred, ibid.

Mnecius (Marcus) is appointed master of the horse by Fabius, I. 242. he gains a slight advantage over the Carthaginians in that dictator's absence, 246. the people give him equal authority with the dictator, ibid. he engages with disadvantage, out of which Fabius extricates him, 247. he acknowledges his fault, and returns to his obedience, ibid. he is killed at the battle of Cannae, 251

Misael, one of the three young Hebrews preserved miraculously in the furnace, II. 33

Mithras, name given the sun by the Persians, III. 320

Mithridates I. king of Pontus, I. clxiii. that prince submits to Alexander, and accompanies him in his expeditions, IV. 386

Mithridates II. king of Pontus, flies to avoid the rage of Antigonus, I. clxiv

Mithridates III. king of Pontus, adds Cappadocia and Paphlagonia to his dominion, I. clxiv

Mithridates IV. king of Pontus, I. clxiv

Mithridates V. surnamed Eupator, ascends the throne of Pontus, I. clxiv, VI. 516, VII. 146. the Romans take Phrygia from him, 147. he poiseffes himself of Cappadocia and Bithynia after having expelled their kings, ibid. 148, 150. he gives his daughter in marriage to Tigranes king of Armenia, 149. open rupture between Mithridates and the Romans, 151. that prince gains some advantages over the Romans, 154. he cau ses all the Romans and Italians in Asia minor to be massacred in one day, ibid. 155. he makes himself master of Athens, ibid. two of his generals are defeated by Sylla, 162, &c. and himself by Fimbria, 167, 168. his fleet is also twice beaten, 168. he has an interview with Sylla, and concludes peace with the Romans, 172. second war of the Romans with Mithridates under Muræa, 177. it subsists only three years, ibid.

Mithridates makes a treaty with Sertorius, VII. 178, 179. he prepares to renew the war with the Romans, 180. he seizes Paphlagonia and Bithynia, ibid. the Romans send Lucullus and Cotta against him, 181. Mithridates defeats Cotta by sea and land, ibid. he forms the siege of Cyzicu m, 182. Lucullus obliges him to raise it, and defeats his troops, 183. Mithridates takes the field to oppose the progres of Lucullus, 186. he is entirely defeated, and obliged to fly, 187. he sends orders to his fathers and wives to die, 188. he retires to Tigranes his son-in-law, 189, 190. Tigranes sends him back into major, VI. 503. death of Mithridates, 516 into Pontus to raise troops, VII. 196. Mithridates endeavors to confide Tigranes after his defeat, 202. those two princes apply in concert to raising new forces, 203. they are defeated by Lucullus, 208.
INDEX.

Mithridates, taking advantage of the misunderstanding in the Roman army, recovers all his dominions, VII. 210, 213. he is defeated on several occasions by Pompey, 219. he endeavors in vain to find an asylum with Tigranes his son-in-law, 220. he retires into the Bosphorus, 225. he puts his son Xiphares to death, 227. he makes proposals of peace to Pompey which are rejected, 229. he forms the design of attacking the Romans in Italy, 231. Pharnaces makes the army revolt against Mithridates, who kills himself, 232. character of Mithridates, 233.

Mithridates I. king of the Parthians, defeats Demetrius and takes him prisoner, VI. 491. he carries that prince into his kingdom, and gives him his daughter Rhodoguna in marriage, ibid.

Mithridates II. surnamed the Great, ascends the throne of Parthia after the death of his uncle Artabanus, VI. 511, VII. 29. he re-establishes Antiochus Eusebes, who had taken refuge with him in his dominions, VI. 534. he sends an ambassador to Sylla to make an alliance with the Romans, VII. 148. death of Mithridates, 27.

Mithridates III. ascends the throne of Parthia after the death of Phraates, VII. 27. Orodes his brother de-thrones and puts him to death, ibid. 28.

Mithridates, young Persian lord, boasts of having given Cyrus the Younger "his mortal wound, III. 328. Parysatis causes him to be put to death, 359.

Mithridates, eunuch and great chamberlain of Xerxes, makes himself an accomplice in the murder of that prince, II. 542.

he is put to death by the punishment of the troughs, III. 2.

Mithridates of Pergamus marches with troops to the aid of Caesar in Egypt, VII. 256.

Mithrobarzanes, favourite of Tigranes, is sent against Lucullus by that prince, VII. 196.

himself and his troops are cut to pieces, ibid.

Mytilene, capital of the isle of Lesbos, II. 276. that city taken by the Athenians, III. 131.

Mnasiphus is sent with a fleet by the Lacedaemonians to retake Corecyra from the Athenians, IV. 136. he is killed in a battle, 137.

Mnaskires, king of the Parthians, VII. 27.

Moebris, name of the ox adored in Egypt, I. 24.

Modesty: Traces of it amongst the ancients, II. 58. it was absolutely neglected at Sparta, 317.

Moebris, king of Egypt, I. 66. famous lake made by him, 10.

Molo is made governor of Media by Antiochus the Great, VI. 481. he makes himself sovereign in his province, ibid.

Antiochus defeats him in a battle, 486. he kills himself out of despair, ibid.

Moloch, name given Saturn in Scripture, I. 1. 6.

Monarchia. Original design of monarchy, II. 46. monarchical the belt form of government, 194, 196.

Monima of Ionia: Mithridates carries her with him in his train, VII. 154. she marries that prince,
INDEX.

prince, VII. 183. tragical death of that princess, 189
Monuments erected by the ancients for those who died for their country, II. 432, 474. what kind of monuments the most durable, III. 47, 79
Moral Philosophy, or Ethicks. It is, properly speaking, the science of kings, IV. 355
Motya, city of Sicily, I. 141
Mummus, conful, is charged with the war in Achaia, VI. 428. he defeats the Achaens, 430. takes Corinth, and entirely demolishes it, 431. he preserves the statues erected in honour of Philopoemen, 191, 435. noble disposals of Mummus, 435; &c. he enters Rome in triumph, 437. he goes on an embassy into Egypt, Asia, Syria, and Greece, 497
Murenna commands the left wing of Sylla's army at the battle of Cheronea, VII. 163. Sylla, on setting out for Rome, leaves him the government of Asia, 175. he makes war against Mithridates, 176. and is defeated, 177. he receives the honour of a triumph at Rome, ibid.
Museum: Academy of the learned, instituted under that name at Alexandria, V. 283. description of the building called Museum, 286
Musicus, Indian prince: Subjected by Alexander, V. 41
Musick. To what perfection carried by the ancients, II. 237. the Greeks considered it as an essential part in the education of youth, III. 531, 532. theatre of musick at Athens, 46. prizes of musick at the feast of Panathenea, I. xxxvi
Mycale, promontory of the continent of Asia, famous for the victory of the Greeks over the Persians, II. 513 Mycenae, city of Peloponnesus, II. 282. kings of Mycenae, ibid.
Mycerinus, king of Egypt, I. 77. mildness of his reign, 78.
Myron, Athenian sculptor, I. lxxvii
Myronides, general of the Athenians, defeats the Spartans near Tanagra in Boeotia, III. 38
Mystics, supposed second wife of Socrates, from whom he had much to suffer, III 435
Mysculus, general of the Achaens, founder of Crotona, III. 90 Mysteries. Feasts of the less and greater mysteries celebrated at Athens in honour of Ceres Eleusina, I. xli

N.

Nabarzanes, general of the horie in the army of Darius, perpetrates an horrible crime upon the person of that prince, IV. 505, &c. he retires into Hyrcania, 507. he surrenders himself to Alexander upon his promise, 518, 519
Nabios makes himself tyrant of Sparta, V. 589. influences of his avarice and cruelty, ibid., 590, VI. 41, 69. Philip puts Argos into his hands by way of deposit, 41. Nabis declares for the Romans against that prince, ibid. the Romans declare war against him, 68. Q. Flaminius marches against him, 69, &c. besieges him in Sparta, 73. obliges him to demand peace, 74. and grants it him, ibid. Nabis breaks the treaty, 83. he is defeated by Philopoemen, 88. and obliged to shut himself up in Sparta, 89. he is killed, 95
Nabonassar, or Belus king of Babylon, II. 26
Nabo-
INDEX.

Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, joins with Cyaxares king of Media, besieges Nineveh, and entirely ruins that city, II. 33, 54. He associates his son Nabucodonosor with him in the empire, and sends him to the head of an army against Nechoa, 34. Nabopolassar’s death, 35.

Nabucodonosor I. or Saosdurchinus, king of Nineveh, II. 32. that prince is attacked by Phraortes, king of the Medes, 51. he defeats him in the plain of Ragau, ravages his dominions, and puts him to death, 33, 51. he sends Hophahernes with a powerful army to revenge him upon the people, who had refused him aid, 52. entire defeat of his army, ibid.

Nabucodonosor II. is associated in the empire of Assyria by Nabopolassar, I. 91, II. 34. He defeats Necho 0, and conquers Syria and Paleftine, ibid. He besieges Jerusalem, makes himself master of it, and carries away a great number of Jews captive to Babylon, II. 34. He reigns in Assyria after the death of his father, 35. Nabucodonosor’s first dream, ibid. That prince marches against Jerusalem, takes it, and carries away all its treasures, 37. he defeats the army of Pharaoh king of Egypt, returns to Jerusalem, and demolishes its fortifications, I. 94, II. 37. He causes himself to be adored as a God, 37, 38. He besieges Tyre, and takes it after a long siege, 38, 39. He makes himself master of Egypt, where he takes great spoils, I. 97. Nabucodonosor’s second dream, II. 39. He is reduced to the condition of beasts, 41. He recovers his former shape, and re-ascends the throne, 41. He dies, ibid.

Naptho, kind of bitumen very combustible, IV. 488.

Naryavasus, Numidian lord, joins Barca in the war with the mercenaries, I. 204.

Navy, naval affairs of the ancients, III. 546.

Naupolium, city of Aetolia, II. 274. It is besieged by Acilius, VI. 111.

Naxus, island, one of the Cyclades, II. 404. Sedition at Naxos, which occasions the revolt of the Ionians against Darius, ibid.

Neapolis, quarter of the city of Syracuse so called, III. 198.

Nearchus, officer of Alexander, undertakes to view the coast from the Indus to the bottom of the Persian gulf, V. 43, 44. He succeeds in his enterprise, 46, Nechoa, king of Egypt, I. 88. He undertakes to open a communication between the Nile and the Red-sea, ibid. Able navigators by his order undertake to sail round Africa, and happily effect it, ibid. 89. Nechoa marches against the Babylonians and Medes to put a stop to their progress, 89. He defeats Josiah king of Judah, who opposed his march, ibid. He beats the Babylonians, takes Carchemis, and returns into his kingdom, 90. On his way he goes to Jerusalem, depriveth Jehoahaz of the crown, and gives it to Jehoiakim, ibid. He is conquered by Nabucodonosor, who retakes Carchemis, 91, II. 34. Death of Nechoa. I. 91.

Nectanebis is placed by the revolted Egyptians upon the throne of Egypt in the room of Tahchos, IV. 195. He is supported by Agesilaus, ibid. By his aid he he reduces the party of the prince of Mendes, IV. 196. not being able to defend himself against Ochus, he escapes into Ethiopia, from whence he never returns, 229.

Nehemiah, Jew, cupbearer of Ahasuerus, obtains permission of that prince to return to Jerusalem, and to rebuild its fortifications, III. 24, &c. he acquires himself of his commission with incredible zeal, ibid.

Neleus, games instituted near that city, I. lxv.

Neoptolemus, one of Alexander's captains; provinces that fell to him after the death of that prince, V. 112. he joins Antipater and Craerus against Perdiccas and Eumenes, 142. he marches with Craerus against the latter, ibid. and is killed in a battle, 143. character of Neoptolemus, 140.

Neoptolemus, uncle of Pyrrhus, reigns in Epirus in his nephew's place, I. clxvii, IV. 265. Pyrrhus causes him to be killed, I. clxvii.

Neoptolemus, Greek poet, IV. 316.

Neriglissar puts himself at the head of a conspiracy against Euthimerodach king of Assyria, and reigns in his stead, II. 42. he makes war with the Medes, and is killed in a battle, 93.

Nero (C. Claudius Nero) consul, quits his province, and makes haste to join his colleague, in order to their attacking Asdrubal, I. 262, 263.

Nevius, Roman officer, surprizes Philip's camp near Apollonia in the night, V. 545.

Necae, city built by Alexander at the place where he had defeated Porus, V. 22.

Nicander is deputed by the Athenians to Philip, VI. 81. he endeavours to engage that prince to join Antiochus against the Romans, ibid.

Nicander, young officer in Alexander's army: Rhaq boldness which costs him his life, V. 14.

Nicander, Cassander's brother, is put to death by order of Olympias, V. 173.

Nicander, governor of Media under Antigonus, is surprized in his camp in the night by Seleucus, and obliged to fly, V. 202. he is killed in a battle, 226.

Nicander, officer of Seleucus Ceraunus, conspires against that prince, and poisons him, V. 479. he is put to death by Achaeus, ibid.

Nicander, lieutenant-general of Antiochus Epiphanes, marches against the Jews, and is defeated by Judas Maccabaeus, VI. 272, &c. Demetrius Soter sends him with an army into Judæa, to assist Alcimus, 473. he is defeated by Judas Maccabaeus, and killed in battle, ibid.

Nicias, general of the Athenians, makes them conclude a peace with the Lacedæmonians, III. 162, &c. he opposes the war of Sicily in vain, 179. he is appointed general with Lamachus and Alcibiades, ibid. 184. his conduct on arriving in Sicily, 191. after some expeditions he forms the siege of Syracuse, 200, 204. the city is reduced to extremities, 209. the arrival of Gyippus changes the face of affairs, 211. Nicias writes to the Athenians the state of his condition,
INDEX.

dition, and to demand reinforcement, III. 214. two colleagues are appointed him, 217. he is compelled by his colleagues to engage in a sea-fight, in which he is defeated, 222. his land army is also defeated, 226. he hazards another sea-fight in concert with Demosthenes, and is again defeated, 230, 233. he determines to retire by land, 234. he is reduced to surrender at discretion, 238. he is condemned to die, and executed, 241

Nicocles, treasurer to Perseus, throws the treasures of that prince into the sea by his order, VI. 335. Perseus puts him to death, 336

Nicocles, son of Evagoras, reigns at Salamin after his father's death, IV. 180. admirable character of that prince, ibid. &c.

Nicocles, king of Paphos, submits to Ptolemy, V. 198. he makes an alliance secretly with Antigonus, ibid. he kills himself, 199

Nicocles, tyrant of Sicyon, is driven out of that city by Aratus, V. 405, &c.

Nicogenses, in whose house Themistocles resides at Aegae, supplies his guest with the means of going to the court of Persia in safety, III. 4

Nicolaus, one of Ptolemy's generals, refuses to defect with Theodotus, and continues to adhere to Ptolemy, V. 492, &c.

Nicolaus, venerable old man, harangues the Syracusans, to diffuse them from condemning the Athenian generals, III. 239

Nicomedes I. king of Bithynia, builds the city of Nicomedia, I cxxi

Nicomedes II. son of Prusias, king of Bithynia, goes to Rome, VI. 410. he kills his father, who had given orders for murdering him, and reigns in his stead, 411. he sets up a child under the name of Ariarathes, and caueth the kingdom of Cappadocia to be demanded for him of the Romans, VII. 68, 69. 147. his death, 149

Nicomedes III. ascends the throne of Bithynia, VII. 149. he is dethroned by Mithridates, ibid. the Romans reinstate him, ibid. he is again expelled by Mithridates, 154. Sylla reconciles him and Mithridates, who restores him his dominions, 172. Nicomedes, in gratitude for the services of the Romans, at his death leaves the Roman people his heir, 180. VI. 537, 538

Nicon, Athlete, V. 110. adventure that happened to his statue, 111

Nicostatus of Argos commands one of the detachments of Ochus's army in that prince's expedition into Egypt, IV. 228

Nicostatus, praetor of the Achæans, defeats the troops of Androthennes, who commanded for Philip at Corinth, VI. 57

Nileus, son of Codrus, settles in Asia minor, II. 288

Nile, river of Africa. Its sources, I. 13. cataraets of the Nile, ibid. causes of its inundation, 14. time that its inundation continues, 15. measure or depth of its inundation, 16. canals of the Nile, 17. fertility occasioned by the Nile, 18. double prospect occasioned by the Nile, 20. canal of communication between the two seas by the Nile, 21

Nimrod, founder of the Assyrian empire, II. 2. history confounds him with his son Ninus, 3. the Scripture places him very near Abraham; for what reason, 6

Nineveh,
INDEX.

Ninivah, city of Assyria, its foundation, II. 5, 6. description of that city, ibid. kings of Nineveh, 6, &c. destruction of that city, 33, 54.
Ninus, king of Assyria, succeeds Nimrod, and is often confounded with that prince, II. 3, 6.
he builds Nineveh, 6, his expedition against the Bactrians, 7. he marries Semiramis, and has a son by her, 8. he dies soon after, ibid.
Niysas, son of Ninus and Semiramis, reigns in Assyria, II. 24. effeminacy and flight of that prince, ibid.
Nitocris, queen of Babylon, II. 42. inscription which the cause to be put upon her tomb, 43.
No-Amon, famous city of Egypt, I. 83.
Nobility. Wherein true nobility consists, V. 192.
Nomi, or governments of Egypt, I. 2, 69.
Numidians, people of Africa, I. 302. their principal force consisted in cavalry, ibid.
Nydrus, general of Dionysius the Younger, relieves the citadel of Syracuse, closely besieged by the Syracusans, IV. 81. he burns and plunders part of the city of Syracuse, ibid. 81. Dionysius drives him out of Syracuse, of which he had made himself master, 97.
Nyssa, nurse of Bacchus, V. 291.
Nyssa, sister of Mithridates, falls into the hands of Lucullus, VII. 188.

Obedience: Model of it in the education of the Spartan youth, II. 300, 312. means necessary to be used for obtaining voluntary obedience, 81, 82.
Obelists of Egypt, I. 5.
Ocha, sister of Ochus, is buried alive by order of that prince, IV. 205.
Ochus takes the name of Darius, from having put a Stop to the infolence of Semrigis the Magus, II. 365. See Darius I.
Ochus, son of Artaxerxes Longimanus, marches at the head of a great army against Sogdianus, III. 148. he gets that prince into his hands, and puts him to death, ibid. &c. he ascends the throne of Per sia, and changes his name from Ochus to Darius, 149. See Darius Nothus.
Ochus, son of Artaxerxes Mene mon, opens his way to the empire by the murder of his brothers, IV. 200. he ascends the throne of Persia, and takes the name of Artaxerxes, 205. cruelties which he commits, 206. his successful expedition against Phoenicia, 222, 226. Cyprus, 227. and Egypt, 227. after those expeditions he abandons himself to pleasures, 231. he is poisoned by Bagoes, ibid.
Octavia, widow of Marcellus, and sister of young Caesar, marries Anthony, VII. 270. she leaves Rome to go to Anthony, and arrives at Athens, 272. Anthony forbids her to come any farther, ibid. she returns to Rome, 273. affront which she receives from Anthony, 277.
Octavius (Cn.) praetor commands the Roman fleet against Perseus, VI. 343, 347, 352. means which he uses to make that prince quit the island of Samothracia, which was deemed a sacred and inviolable asylum, 370. Perseus puts himself into his hands, 372. Octavius receives the honour of a triumph, 386. the Romans send him to Syria as ambassador, 460. he is murdered there, 469. the senate erect a statue to him, 470.
Octa-
INDEX.

Octavius, Caesius’s lieutenant, endeavours in vain to console him for his defeat, VII. 46. he accompanies that general in his interview with Surena, 51. he is killed in defending him, 53

Odeon, or theatre of musick at Athens, III. 46

Oebares, Darius’s groom, by his address secures the crown of Persia to his master, II. 195, 366

Oebazus, Persian lord, barbarous cruelty of Darius in respect to him, II. 395

Oecumany. It is one of the principal qualities of political ability, III. 52

Othace, king of Colchis, is subdued by Pompey, who makes him serve as an ornament in his triumph, VII. 235

Olympia, city of Elis in Peloponnesus, famous for the temple of Jupiter, I. 65

Olympia, castle in the neighbourhood of Syracuse, III. 201

Olympias, daughter of Neopolismus, is married to Philip king of Macedonia, and has by that prince Alexander the Great, IV. 262. Philip repudiates her, 335. Alexander carries her to Epirus, ibid. Polyperchon recalls her from Epirus, whither she had retired during Antipater’s regency, and divides the government with her, V. 154. Olympias causes Aridaeus and his wife Eurydice to be put to death, 173. Calander besieges her in Pydna, whither she had retired, takes her prisoner, and puts her to death, 174, 175

Olympick. Solemn games of Greece, I. lxv, lxvi. Ladies admitted to them, lxxxvi

Olympicst. Epocha of the Olympiads, II. 285

Olynthus, city of Thrace, IV. 118. the Lacedaemonians declare war against it, 118. It is reduced to surrender, 122. Olynthus, upon the point of being besieged by Philip, implores aid of the Athenians, IV. 280. Philip makes himself master of that city by the treason of two of its citizens, and plunders it, 285

Onesicritus, philosopher and historian: Alexander deputes him to the Brachmans, to engage them to join his train, V. 27. he can prevail upon none of them to do so except Callinus, 28

Onesimus, Macedonian lord, not being able to dissuade Perseus from making war with the Romans, quits his party, and retires to Rome, VI. 338

Onias, son of Jaddus, high-priest of the Jews, succeeds his father, V. 147. his death, 260, 261

Onias, high-priest of the Jews, makes himself venerable for his piety, VI. 235. he refuses Heiodorus the treasures kept in the temple of Jerusalem, 236, &c. he is deposed by the intrigues of Jafon his brother, 241. his death, 244

Onias, son of the former, having failed of the high-priesthood, retires into Egypt, VI. 478. he builds a temple there for the Jews, ibid. &c.

Onomarchus, brother of Philometus, general of the Phocæans, takes upon him the command of the troops in his stead, IV. 272. he is defeated by Philip, and killed in the battle, 274. his body is fastened to a gibbet, ibid.

Onomastes, governor of Thrace, for Philip, executes the cruel decree of that prince against the people of Maronasa, 180

Ophellas, governor of Libya and Cyrenaica, revolts against Ptolemy, and renders himself inde-Independent, V. 211, he suffers himself to be seduced by Agathocles, and carries him troops into the country of the Carthaginians, ibid. 212, I. 170. Agathocles puts him to death, ibid.

Ophra, king of Egypt. See Apries.

Oppius, Roman proconsul, marches against Mithridates, and is taken prisoner, VII. 153

Oracles: Famous ones of antiquity, I. 51. of Dodona, ibid. of Trophonius in Bœotia, ibid. of the Branchidæ, iii. of Claros, ibid. of Delphos, iii. usu. characcter of oracles, iv. whether they are to be ascribed to the operation of devils, or the knavery of men, Iviii

Orations: Funeral orations pronounced in Greece over the tombs of those who had died fighting for their country, III.
168

Orator: Quality most essential to an orator; IV. 238

Orchestra, part of the theatre of the ancients, I. cxii, cxxiii

Orchomenus, part of Bœotia, where the battle between Sylla and Ar-chelaus was fought, VII. 166

Orestes, son and successor of Aga-memnon king of Mycenæ,
II. 283

Orestes, Roman commissary, goes to Corinth, and notifies to the Achæans the decree of the state for separating several cities from their league, VI. 424. he flies to escape the violence of the people, 425

Orestes, governor of Asia minor for Cambyses, puts Poly-drates to death, and seizes the island of Samos, II. 187. Darius puts him to death, 370

Oroandes of Crete promises Pericles to receive him into his ship, and embarks part of the riches of that prince, VI. 371.
he runs away with those trea-

ures, ibid

Orobazus is sent ambassador to Sylla, by Araxes king of Parthia, to make an alliance with the Romans, VII. 148. Araxes puts him to death at his return,
ibid.

Orodes king of Parthia, VII. 28. war of that prince with the Romans under Cralus, ibid. Oorodes, jealous of the glory Surena had acquired by the defeat of Cralus, puts him to death, 56. grief of that prince for the death of his son Pacorus, 62.
he chooses Phraates for his successor, who causes him to be put to death, ibid. 63

Oroplanes, divinity worshipped by the Persians, II. 253

Orontes, son-in-law of Artaxxerxes Maemon, commands the land-army of that prince in the war against Evagoras, III. 411.
he accuses Teribafus falsely, 412. he terminates the war with Evagoras by a treaty of peace, 413. Artaxerxes punishes him for his false accusation, 419

Oroplanes, governor of Mycia, joins with the provinces of Asia minor, in their revolt against Artaxerxes Maemon, and then betrays them, IV. 197, 198

Orphans: Charondas's law in favour of them, III. 94

Orosaces, old general, accompanies Pacorus in his expeditions by order of Orodes, VII. 57.
he is killed in a battle, 58

Orsines, governor of Partagarades, re-establishes good order throughout the whole province,
V. 48. he goes to meet Alexander with magnificent presents, ibid. he is put to death in effect of the secret intrigues of the cunuch Bagas, 49, 51

Orthia.
INDEX.

Orthia. Inhuman worship rendered by the Lacedaemonians to Diana, surnamed Orthia, II. 301

Ortygia, island near Syracuse, III. 198

Osseus. See Hosea.

Ostris, Persian lord, marches at the head of an army against Megabythus, III. 22. He is defeated and taken prisoner, ibid. Megabythus generously lends him back to Artaxerxes, ibid.

Ostanes, chief of the Magi, accompanies Xerxes in his expedition against Greece, II. 514

Oscrasium, a kind of sentence amongst the Athenians, by which perfons were condemned to banishment, II. 435. The banishment of Hyperbolus puts an end to the oscrasium, III. 173

Ostrimandias, king of Egypt, I. 65. Magnificent edifices which he caused to be erected, ibid. Famous library formed by that prince, ibid. His tomb surrounded with a circle of gold, which Cambyses afterwards took away, ibid. II. 183

Ostanes, Persian lord, discovers the imposture of Smerdis the Magus, by the means of his daughter, II. 191. He forms a conspiracy against that usurper, 192. He re-establishes Sylphon, tyrant of Samos, 378

Otthyades, Lacedaemonian, obtains the victory for the Lacedaemonians over the Argives by his valour, I. ciii. He kills himself upon the field of battle, ibid.

Oxathres, brother of Darius, distinguishes himself in the battle of Issus, IV. 469. Alexander puts Bessus into his hands, to inflict upon that traitor the punishment he deserved, 526

Oxyartes, Persian prince, entertains Alexander in his houfe, and gives him his daughter Roxana in marriage, IV. 560

Oxydracæ, people of India, V. 35. Their capital besieged and taken by Alexander, ibid, they submit to that prince, 38

Oxyrhinebus, city of the lower Thebais, I. 42, 43. Wonder related of that city by the Abbe Fleury in his ecclesiastical history, ibid.

P.

Pacorus, son of Orodès, king of the Parthians, enters Syria at the head of an army, and besieges Antioch, VII. 57. He raises the siege of that city, and is defeated in a battle, 58. He returns into Syria, and is defeated and killed in a battle, 61

Paganism. General reflections upon paganism, I. xxxiv, &c. absurdities of paganism, xlviii, 1. What the highest perfection to be expected from it was, III. 95, 96

Pelamedes, tragedy wrote by Hec. ripides on occasion of the death of Socrates, III. 480

Palatium, province of Syria, I. xxxiv

Palatium, publick schools in which the athletes exercised themselves in wrestling, I lxii

Palcæa, city of Sicily, near which there was a temple famous for the sanctity of the oaths taken there, III. 86

Palatides, difference of those used by the Greeks and Romans in fortifying their camps, VI. 43.

Pammenes commands the troops sent by the Thebans to the aid of Artabases, and occasions his gaining two considerable victories, IV. 207

Pax
INDEX.

Pammenees, Athenian general, marches to the aid of the city of Megalopolis, besieged by the Lacedaemonians, IV. 218

Pamphylia, province of Asia minor, I. xxxi

Panathenea, festival celebrated at Athens, I. xxxvi

Panthæum, kind of combat among the ancients, I. lxxv, &c.

Panetius, Stoick philosopher; he accompanies Scipio in his embassy to the kings of the East, VI. 498

Pantauchus, Perseus's ambassador to Gentius, engages that prince in his master's interest against the Romans, VI. 351

Panthæa, wife of Abradates, is taken prisoner by Cyrus, II. 98. Conduct of that prince in regard to her, ibid. She brings over her husband to Cyrus, 100. Her discourse with him before he sets out for the battle, 115. The excess of her grief upon the death of Abradates, 122. She flabs herself with a dagger, and falls dead upon her husband, ibid.

Paphlagonia, province of Asia minor, I. xxxi

Pepiria, mother of the second Scipio Africanus: Magnificent liberality of Scipio in regard to her, I. 329

Papyrus, plant of Egypt: Description of it, I. 56

Paralus, last of the legitimate children of Pericles, dies of the plague, III. 115

Parasanga, measure of ways peculiar to the Persians, III. 357

Parchment: Invention of parchment, I. 56

Paris, Trojan, returning home with Helen, whom he had ravished, is carried by a tempest into one of the mouths of the Nile, I. 75. Proteus king of Egypt obliges him to leave Helen with him, and to quit Egypt, 76. Paris returns to Troy, ibid.

Parmenio, one of Alexander's generals, is placed at the head of the infantry, in the expedition of that prince against the Persians, and does him great service, IV. 375. He feizes the pas of Syria, and makes himself master of the small city of Issus, 401. Alexander confines the treasures laid up in Damascus, and the keeping of the prisoners to him, 419. Parmenio advises that prince to accept Darius's offers, 448. Surprize of Parmenio, on seeing Alexander prostrate himself before the high-priest Jaddus, 451, 452. Alexander cauises him to be killed as an accomplice in the conspiracy of Philotas, 532. Praise of Parmenio, 533

Parmys, daughter of the true Smerdis, marries Darius I. II. 366

Parricide. Reasons that prevented Solon from making any law against that crime, II. 331

Parteniatæ, name given to the illegitimate children of the Lacedaemonians: When grown up, they banish themselves from Sparta, and settle at Tarentum in Italy, I. cxlv

Parthenon, temple of Minerva at Athens, III. 45

Parysatis, sister and wife of Darius Nothus, III. 152. Her ascendant over her husband, ibid. 266. Idolatry of Parysatis for her son Cyrus, ibid. 294, 297. She obtains pardon of Artaxerxes for that son, and cauæs him him to be sent back to his government, III. 297. cruelty and jealousy of Parytatis, 360, 361. the poisons Statira, 362. Artaxerxes confines her in Babylon, ibid. Patargada, city of Persia, submits to Alexander, IV. 503.
INDEX.

Pateremis, officer of Apries, not having been able to seize Amasis in the midst of the revolted Egyptians, is treated in the most cruel manner by that prince, I. 99.

Patience of the Lacedaemonians, II. 301.

Patisithes, chief of the Magi, places his brother Smerdis upon the throne of Persia, II. 188, 189. he is killed with his brother, 193.

Patroclus, governor of Babylon for Seleucus, abandons that city upon the approach of Demetrius, and retires into the marshes, V. 206.

Patroclus commands the fleet sent by Ptolemy Philadelphus to the aid of the Athenians besieged by Antigonus Gonatas, V. 367. he returns into Egypt, and at Caunus caues Sotades the fatyrick poet to be put to death, ibid. 368.

Patroclus, Athenian, cites Demothenes before the judges as an infractor of the laws, IV. 244. bad success of his accusation, ibid.

Patron, general of the Greeks in the pay of Darius, advises that prince in vain to confide the guard of his perfon to the Greeks, IV. 505.

Paulus Emilius. See Emilius.

Pausanias, king of Lacedæmon, commands the army of the Greeks jointly with Artilides, and gains a great battle over the Persians, II. 503, &c. he makes the Lacedæmonians lose the chief command by his haughtiness, 525. his secret conspiracy with the Persians, 528. he is discovered, 529. and punished, 530.

Pausanias, king of Lacedæmonia, commands at the siege of Athens, III. 289. he obtains peace for the Athenians, 308. he neglects to march to the aid of Lyfander, and is summoned to take his trial on his return, 390, 391. he refuses to appear, and is condemned to die, 391. he retires to Tegæum, and dies there, ibid.

Pausanias, Macedonian prince, poises himself of the throne of Macedonia, IV. 253. he is dethroned by Iphocrates, ibid.

Pausanias, young Macedonian lord, cannot obtain satisfaction for Philip for an infult which he had received from Attalus, IV. 337. he affallinates Philip in revenge, and is torn to pieces upon the spot, 338.

Pausistratus, commander of the Rhodian fleet, is defeated by Polyxenides, Antiochus's admiral, and killed in the battle, VI. 117.

Pay of the troops by sea and land amongst the ancients, III. 551, 552.

Peace. It ought to be the end of every wise government, V. 161.

Pedaretus, Lacedæmonian: His love of his country, II. 302.

Pelagius teaches the first Greeks to live upon acorns, II. 286.

Pella, capital of Macedonia, famous for the birth of Philip and Alexander, IV. 250.

Pelopidas, Theban: His character, IV. 123. his friendship with Epaminondas, 124. he abandons Thebes, and retires to Athens, 120. he forms the design of reinfating the liberty of his country, 126. he is elected Boeotarch,
INDEX.

Boeotarch, IV. 132. he drives the garrison out of the citadel, ibid. he causes the Athenians to declare for the Thebans, 134. he gains an advantage over the Lacedemonians near Tegyra, 138. he commands the sacred battalion at the battle of Leuctra, 143. he is created Boeotarch with Epaminondas, ravages Laconia, and advances to the gates of Sparta, 148, 151. at his return he is accused and acquitted, 153. the Thebans send him ambassador to the court of Persia, 157. his credit with Artaxerxes, 158. Pelopidas marches against Alexander, tyrant of Pherae, and reduces him to reason, IV. 161. he goes to Macedonia to appease the troubles of that court, and brings away Philip as a hostage, 162, 254. he returns into Thessaly, 163. he is seized, and made prisoner by treachery, ibid. he animates Phebe, wife of Alexander, against her husband, 165. he is delivered by Epaminondas, 167. Pelopidas marches against the tyrant, gains a victory over him, and is killed in the battle, 168, &c. singular honours paid to his memory, 171.

Pelopidas, one of the officers of Mithridates, is sent ambassador by that prince to demand satisfaction of the Romans, and to declare war against them in case of refusal, VII. 150, 151.

Peloponnesus, province and peninsula of Greece, now called the Morea, II. 273, 283. Peloponnesian war, III. 99.

Pelops gives his name to Peloponnesus, II. 283.

Pelasgus, city of Lower Egypt, I. 22.

Pensions. Manner of giving pensions by the kings of Persia, II. 219, 220.

Pentacostomedimni, citizens of the first class at Athens, III. 510.

Pentathum, assembly of several agonistic exercises amongst the Greeks, I. lxvii.

Pentilus, son of Orestes, reigns at Mycenae with his brother Tifamenes, II. 283.

People, description and character of the people, III. 23, 281, IV. 211, V. 158, 159, VII. 109.

Perdiccas, son of Amyntas II. is placed upon the throne of Macedonia by Pelopidas, IV. 161, 162, 253. he is killed in a battle against the Illyrians, IV. 162, 255.

Perdiccas, one of Alexander’s generals, receives that prince’s ring a moment before his death, V. 74, 111. provinces which fell to him after the death of Alexander, 113. he is appointed guardian of Aridaeus, and regent of the empire, 111. he puts Statira, Alexander’s widow, to death, 115. he quells the revolt of the Greeks in Upper Asia, 116. he puts Eumenes into possession of Cappadocia, 138. he marries Cleopatra, Alexander’s sister, 139. his unfortunate expedition into Egypt, 141, 145. he is killed there, 144.

Pergamus, city of Great Myxia in Asia minor, I. xxxi. kings of Pergamus, cxxii. the kingdom of Pergamus becomes a Roman province, VI. 503.

Periander, tyrant of Corinth, is ranked in the number of the seven sages, II. 280, 356.

Pericles, Athenian: His extraction, Ill. 28. his education, ibid. care that he takes to cultivate his mind by the study of the sciences, and of exercising himself in eloquence, 29, 31. means that he employs for conciliating the favour of the people,
INDEX.

Perjury. Punishment of perjury in Egypt, I. 32

Perpena, Roman ambassador to Gentius, is imprisoned, VI. 352. Anicius delivers him, and sends him to Rome with the news of his victory, 353. Perpena, when consul, marches against Aristonicus, defeats him in a battle and takes him prisoner, 502. He dies on his return to Rome, 503

Perseus, first king of Mycenae, II. 282

Perseus, son of Philip, last king of Macedonia, forms a conspiracy against his brother Demetrius, and accuses him to Philip, VI. 207, 209, 211. His speech against his brother, 213. Perseus removes from court to avoid his father's indignation, 232, 233. He takes possession of the throne of Macedonia after his father's death, 234. He puts Antigonus, whom his father had chosen his successor, to death, 292. He prepares secretly for war with the Romans, 293. He endeavours to gain allies, ibid. He tries in vain to bring over the Achaeans, 294. The Romans are informed of his secret measures, 297. Eumenes confirms them concerning his proceedings, ibid. Perseus endeavours to rid himself of that prince, first by assassination, 299, 300. And afterwards by poison, 300. Rupture between Perseus and the Romans, 301. Interview of Perseus and Marcus, 306. War declared in form, 311. Perseus advances with his troops near the river Peneus, 317. Battle of the cavalry, in which that prince gains a considerable advantage, and makes an ill use of it, 320, 321. He makes proposals of peace, which are rejected, 324, 325. He takes fright upon the arrival of the Xi

Pericles, son of the former, one of the Athenian generals, who defeated the Lacedaemonians near the island Arginusae, is condemned with his colleagues to die, III. 274, 280

Perinthus, city of Thrace, besieged by Philip, and delivered by the Athenians, IV. 308, 313

Vol. VII.
INDEX.

conful Marcius in Macedonia, and leaves him the passage open 333, 334. he resumes courage soon after, 335. he solicits aid on all sides, 347. his avarice lofs him considerable succours, 349. he is entirely defeated and put to flight by Paulus Æmilius at the battle of Pydna, 363, &c. he is taken prisoner with his children, 372. and serves as an ornament in the triumph of Paulus Æmilius, 385. death of Perfeus, 386

Perfepolis, capital city of Perßia, subjected by Alexander, who burns the palace of it in a party of debauch, IV. 498, &c.

Manners and customs of the Persians, II. 196. education of the Persians in the time of Cyrus, 72. government of the Persians, 196. form of it monarchical, ibid. coronation of their kings, III. 266. respect paid to them, II. 197. manner of educating their children, 198, 199. publick council of the Persians, 200. administration of justice, 203. attention to provinces, 208. care of their finances, 217. of war, 220. entrance into the troops, ibid. arms of the Perßians, 221. their chariots armed with scythes, 222. military discipline of the Persians, 224. their order of battle, 226. manner of going to battle, III. 324. quality of the Persians troops in the time of Cyrus, and after that prince, II. 97, 232. arts and sciences of the Persians, 234. their religion, 247. marriages and burials, 255

Petalism, kind of sentence established at Syracuse, III. 86

Petra, a very strong place in the country of the Nabathæan Arabs, V. 205

Peta Oxiana, inaccessible rock, IV. 547. Alexander makes himself master of it, 550, &c.

Peucetes, one of Alexander's captains, distinguishes himself at the siege of the city of Oxydrace, V. 35. provinces which fell to him after the death of Alexander, 113. he opposes the progress of Pithon, and drives him out of Media, 172

Phalanthus, general of the Spartans called. Partheniatae, settles them at Tarentum, I. cxxiv

Phalaris, Macedonian: Description of it, IV. 263

Phalaris, his bull taken at the siege of Agrigentum and sent to Carthage, I. 148

Phalecous is appointed general of the Phœcæans during the sacred war, in the room of Phayllus, IV. 275. he pillages the temple of Delphæs as the other had done, and is deposed, ibid.

Phaleræ, part of Athens, II. 521

Phæmas, general of the Carthaginian cavalry, dares not take the field, when Scipio is to support the forages, I. 312. he goes over to the Romans, 343

Phanes of Halicarnassus, general of the Greek auxiliaries in the army of Amasias, goes over upon some discontent to Cambyses, II.
INDEX.

II. 178, the Greeks in the king of Egypt's service murder his children in revenge, 179

Pharaoh, common name of the kings of Egypt, I. 69. one of them gives his daughter to Solomon in marriage, 79

Pharisees, powerful in Judaea, VI. 524, 526. persecution of Alexander Janneus and his party by the Pharisees, 545, VII. 8. end of that persecution, 12

Pharnaces, governor of Asia, and general of the troops of Darius and Artaxerxes, kings of Persia, aids the Lacedemonians against the Athenians, III. 257, 258, he makes peace with the latter, 260. he sends complaints against Lyfander to Sparta, 314. his whole province is ravaged by Agesilaus, 385. interview of Agesilaus and Pharnabasus, 386. the latter is charged by Artaxerxes with the war against Egypt, IV. 189. the enterprise miscarries through his fault, 191

Pharnaces makes the army revolt against his father Mithridates, and is elected king in his stead, VII. 232. he is declared the friend and ally of the Romans, 255. he is defeated and driven out of Pontus by Cæsar, 252, 262

Pharnaces, eunuch of Xerxes. II. supplies Sogdianus with the means for assassinating that prince, 147

Pharos, its famous tower or light-house, V. 282

Phasael, brother of Herod, is made governor of Jerusalem, VII. 19. he is taken by the Parthians, and put in chains, ibid. he kills himself to avoid the ignominy of punishment, ibid.

Phayllus, general of the Phœcians during the sacred war, plunders the temple of Delphos to defray the expenses of that war, IV. 274. his death, ibid.

Phayllus, of Crotona, Athleta: His affection for the Greeks, and valour, IV. 485

Phedias, Lacedemonian, sets out from Sparta at the head of a body of troops against Olynthus, IV. 119. he seizes the citadel of Thebes by fraud, 120. he is deprived of the command, and fined, 121

Phedyma, daughter of Otanes, and wife of Smerdis the Magus, discovers that usurper's imposture, II. 191. he marries Darius after the death of Smerdis, 366

Phœnicia, or Phænicia, province of Syria, I. xxxii. revolt of Phœnicia against Ochus, IV. 222

Pherendates, Periæan lord, made governor of Egypt by Ochus, IV. 229

Pherenicus, one of the principal conspirators against the tyrants of Thebes, IV. 127

Pheron, king of Egypt. I. 75. action of that prince against the Nile, ibid.

Phidias, famous painter and sculptor. Pericles gives him the direction of the publick buildings at Athens, III. 46. ingratitude of the Athenians to Phidias, 66

Philæ, Antipater's daughter, is married to Craterus, V. 131. after the death of Craterus she marries Demetrius Poliorcetes, ibid. 221. she kills herself with poison, 277. praise of that prince, 133

Phila, daughter of Seleucus and Statilia, marries Antiochus Gonatas, V. 5. 8

Philadelphus, name given ironically to Ptolemy II. King of Egypt, V. 281. See Ptolemy Philadelphus.

I 12
INDEX.

Philammon affasillates Arsinoe, wife and wife of Ptolemy Philopator, V. 503. he is beaten to death with staves by the ladies of honour to that princess, VI. 3

Philæni, two brothers, citizens of Carthage, sacrifice their lives for the good of their country, I. 135. the Carthaginians, out of gratitude, consecrate two altars to them, ibid.

Philænius, Lacedæmonian, accompanies Hannibal in his expeditions, and composes the history of that great captain, I. 293

Philemon, comic poet, preferred by the Greeks to Menander in his own lifetime, I. cxxi

Philetæres, founder of the kingdom of Pergamus, I. cxxi, V. 370. means which he uses for supporting himself in that kingdom, ibid.

Philidas, one of the conspirators against the tyrants of Thebes, finds means to make himself their secretary, IV. 126. on the day fixed by the conspirators, he gives the tyrants a supper, 128. the conspirators kill them at his house, 131

Philip, son of Amyntas II. King of Macedonia: His birth, IV. 251. Pelopidas carries him to Thebes as an hostage, 162, 253. he flies from Thebes into Macedonia, and is placed upon the throne, 255. beginnings of his reign, ibid. he makes a campions peace with the Athenians, 257. his first conquests, 260. birth of Alexander, 262. Philip's care of his education, ibid. 263. he endeavours to subjugate Thrace, and takes Methone, at the siege of which place he loses an eye, 273. he conciliates the amity of the Thracians, and expels their tyrants, 274, 275. he endeavours to seize the passes of Thermopylae in vain, 275. he takes the city of Olynthus, notwithstanding the efforts of the Athenians to prevent it, 285. he declares for the Thebans against the Phocaeans, and begins in that manner to share in the sacred war, 286. he lulls the Athenians with a false peace and false promises, 288. he seizes the Thermopylae, reduces the Phocaeans, and terminates the sacred war, 292, 293. he causes himself to be admitted into the council of the Amphiélyons, 293

Philip on his return into Macedonia, pushes his conquests into Illyrium and Thrace, IV. 296. he enters into a league with the Thebans, Argives, and Messenians, for attacking Peloponnesus with their joint forces, 300, 301. Athens declaring for the Lacedæmonians, breaks that league, 302. Philip makes an attempt upon Euboea, 303. Phocion drives him out of that island, 306. Philip forms the siege of Perinthus and Byzantium, 309. Phocion obliges him to raise both those sieges, 313. Philip subjects Atheas king of the Scythians, and the Triballi, people of Mæssa, 315. by his intrigues, he causes himself to be declared generalissimo of the Greeks in the council of the Amphyctions, 317, &c. he seizes Euboea, 319. the Athenians and Thebans enter into a league against him, 324. he makes proposals of peace, which are rejected by the advice of Demetrenes, ibid. battle of Chaeronea, in which Philip gains a great victory, 325, 326. Philip in the council of the Amphyctions causes himself to be declared general of the Greeks against the Persians, and prepares for that great expedition, IV.
INDEX.

IV. 334. domestic troubles in his family, ibid. he repudiates Olympias, and marries another wife, 335. he celebrates the nuptials of Cleopatra his daughter with Alexander king of Epirus, and is killed in the midst of them, 336, &c. memorable actions and sayings of Philip, 339. good and bad characters of that prince, ibid. &c.

Philip, son of Demetrius, ascends the throne of Macedonia, V. 474. his affection for Aratus, 506, 507. he takes upon him the defence of the Achaens against the Ætolians, ibid. different expeditions of Philip against the enemies of the Achaens, 515. strange abuse that Apelles his minister makes of his confidence, 517. irruption of Philip into Ætolia, 524, 525. he takes Thermæ by surprize, 526. excesses committed there by his soldiers, ibid. prudence which he shews in his retreat, 528, 529. troubles in his camp, 530. punishment of the authors of them, ibid. irruption of Philip into Laconia, ibid. new intrigue of the conspirators, 531. their punishment 534. Philip takes Thebes of Phthiotis from the Ætolians, 538. he concludes a peace with them, 540. Philip concludes a treaty with Hannibal, V. 543. he makes preparations for carrying the war into Italy, 544. he is surprized and defeated by the Romans at Apollonia, 545. his change of conduct, 546. his bad faith and irregularities, ibid, &c. he causes Aratus to be poisoned, 547. he makes himself master of the city and castle of Lissus, 549. he gains several advantages over the Ætolians, 554. he is repulsed near the city of Elit, 556. different actions of Philip against Sulpi-
INDEX.

Philip, one of Alexander's captains: Provinces which fell to him after that prince's death, V. 113

Philip, in concert with his brother Antiochus, destroys the city of Mopsuestia, to avenge the death of his brother Seleucus, VI. 533. He reigns in Syria with his brother Demetrius, after having driven out Eucycles, 534. Philip's death, 536

Philip, Phergian, is made governor of Judaea by Antiochus Epiphanes, VI. 249

Philip, foster brother and favourite of Antiochus Epiphanes, is made governor by that prince of his son Antiochus Eupator, and regent of Syria, VI. 278, 279, 458. Lydes usurps that employment from him, 458. Philip retires into Egypt, ibid.

Philip, of Acarnania, physician, known from the fallutary draught which he gave Alexander, IV. 393

Philipburg, town of Germany, besieged and taken by the French, VI. 158

Philiscus is sent by the king of Persia to reconcile the states of Greece, IV. 156

Philistus, rich citizen of Syracuse, pays a fine for Dionyfius, IV. 6. Dionyfius banishes him, 45. Dionyfius the Younger recalls him to court, 58. Death of Philistus, 79. He may be considered as a great historian, 58

Philocles, Macedonian, devoted to Perseus, is sent by Philip on an embassy to Rome, VI. 228. At his return he delivers a forged letter to that prince under the counterfeited seal of T. Quintius, which occasions the death of Demetrius, 230. Philip caueth him to be seized, and put to the question, in which he dies, 232

Philocles, one of the Athenian generals, is defeated and made prisoner with his colleagues at the battle of Ego[s]potamos, III. 287. He is put to death, 288

Philomedes, general of the Phoecæans, sets them against the decree of the Amphictyons, and determines them to take arms, IV. 270. He makes himself master of the temple of Delphi, and takes the riches of it to pay his troops, 271, 272. He is defeated in a battle, and throws himself headlong from the top of a rock, 272

Philonides, runner to Alexander the Great, famous for his swiftness, I. lxxx Philopæmon, Megalopolitan: Determines his citizens to reject the offers of Cleomenes, V. 461, 467. He signalizes himself at the battle of Selasia, 469. He distinguishes himself in the battle near the city of Elis, 556. His education, 557. His great qualities, 558, &c. He is elected general of the horse by the Achaæans, 561. He reforms the Achaean troops, 562. He is elected captain general of the Achaæans, 581. He gains a famous victory over Machanidas tyrant of Sparta, and kills him in the battle, 583, 586. The Achaæans erect him a statue, 586. Honours which he receives in the assembly at the Nemean games, 587, &c. Philopæmon is defeated at sea by the tyrant Nabis, VI. 88. He gains a famous victory over that tyrant near Sparta, 89. After the death of Nabis he seizes Sparta, and obliges that city to enter into the Achaean league, 95. He refuses the presents offered, ferred him by the Spartans, VI. 96. he secretly favours the Spartan exiles, and causes war to be declared against that city, 152. 153. he makes himself master of Sparta, and reinstates the exiles, 154. he attacks Messene, and is taken prisoner, 187. the Messenians put him to death, 188. honours paid to his memory, 190. trial of Philopoemen after his death, 190, 435.

Philosophers, Philosophy. It is wonderfully proper for forming the hero, IV. 181, 182. the study of this science incompatible with slavery, III. 38.

Philotas, son of Parmenio, commands a body of horse in Alexander's expedition against Perse, IV. 375. pretended conspiracy of Philotas against Alexander, 523, 527, &c. he is put to death, 531.

Philotas, governor of Upper Asia, is put to death by Pithon, V. 172.

Philo Xenus, poet, favourite of Dionysius the Tyrant: His generous freedom, IV. 42, &c.

Philo Xenus, Macedonian, seizes Harpalus, and causes him to be put to the question, V. 58.

Phocaea, city of Ionia, is condemned to be destroyed by the Romans, VI. 503. the Markillians originally descended from that city obtain pardon for it, ibid.

Phocion, general of the Athenians, drives Philip out of Euboea, IV. 305. he makes that prince raise the siege of Perinthus and Byzantium, 313. he rejects the offers of Harpalus, V. 56. he endeavours in vain to prevent the Athenians from engaging in the Lamanian war, 117. he is condemned to die by the Athenians, 156. his body is carried out of the territory of Attica, 157. the Athenians erect a statue to him, and inter his bones honourably, 162. character and praise of Phocion, IV. 303, V. 55, 158, &c.

Phocis, part of Greece, II. 276. it is ravaged by Xerxes, 480. the Lacedaemonians deprive the people of Phocis of the custody of the temple of Delphi, III. 56. Pericles restores it to them, ibid. the Phocæans till the ground consecrated to Apollo, IV. 270. they are declared guilty of sacrilege, and are fined, ibid. they take arms against the decree of the Amphilcyons, ibid. the latter make war against the Phocæans, 271. Philip reduces them, 293.

Phœnix, fabulous bird; wonders related of it, I. 23.

Phoroneus, king of Argos, II. 282.

Phraætes I. son of Priaepatus, king of the Parthians, VII. 26.

Phraætes II. succeeds his father Mithridates in the kingdom of Parthia, VII. 26. he is defeated three times by Antiochus Sidetes, VI. 508. he releaseth Demetrius, 509. he defeats Antiochus, who is killed in the battle, 508, 509. he marries one of that prince's daughters, 509. he is defeated by the Scythians, who had called in Antiochus to their aid, and is killed in flying, 510, 511.

Phraætes III. surnamed Theos, king of the Parthians, VII. 27. he makes an alliance with the Romans during the war with Mithridates, ibid. he espouses the part of Tigranes the Younger against his father, ibid. death of Phraætes, ibid.

Phraætes IV. is placed by his father Orodes upon the Parthian throne, ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

ibid.

333'

before

37

V.

Provinces

193

3

335

Phraortes, Phrynicus, Phrataphernes, Phrygia, Phyllus, Phyto, Pindar, Pisander, Fisromh, firaus, defeat, throne, VII. 63. he puts his brothers, father, and his son, to death, ibid.

Phraortes, king of the Medes, succeeds his father Deioces, II. 50. he makes himself master of, almost all Upper Asia, 51. he makes war against the Assyrians, ibid. he is defeated, ibid. Nabucodonosor puts him to death, ibid. 52

Phrataphernes, one of Alexander's generals: Provinces which fall to him after that prince's death, V. 113

Phrygica, province of Asia minor, i. xxxii

Phrynicus, one of the Athenian generals, opposes the recall of Alcibiades, III. 250. he is discharged of the command, 251

Phrynion commands the army of the Athenians sent against Mitylene, II. 354. he accepts the challenge of Pittacus, and is killed, ibid.

Phyllus, Lacedaemonian officer, is killed at the siege of Sparta by Pyrrhus, fighting valiantly, V. 356

Physcon. See Ptolemy Evergetes, surnamed Physcon.

Phyto, general of the troops of Rhegium, defends that city against Dionyphus, IV. 36. Dionyphus, after having made him suffer great indignities, puts him to death, 37

Pindar, Greek lyric poet, character of his works, III. 82, 83

Piraeus, port of Athens, II. 521

Pirromis, name given to kings, said by the Egyptian priests to have reigned in Egypt, 1. 84

Pisander, Athenian captain, determines the people of Athens to recall Alcibiades, III. 251. the Athenians send him to treat with Alcibiades and Tissaphernes, ibid. at his return he changes the form of the government, 252

Pisander, Lacedaemonian, is appointed by Agesilaus his brother-in-law to command the fleet in his stead, III. 384, 385. he is defeated by Conon near Cnidos, and killed in the battle, 395

Pisistrateus, Athenian, makes himself tyrant of Athens, II. 331, 333. lenity of his government, 335. his death, 336. his character, 332. library founded by him at Athens, 335

Piso (Calphurnius) confidant, commands at the siege of Carthage before the arrival of Scipio, I. 313

Pisithras, governor of Lydia for Darius, revolts against that prince, III. 150. he is taken, and put to death, ibid.

Pithon, one of Alexander's captains, is made governor of Media by Antipater, V. 147. he cauls Philocas to be put to death, and takes possession of his government, 172. he is driven out of Media by Peufetes, and obliged to retire to Seleucus, ibid. 173. Antigonus puts him to death, 193

Pittacus of Mitylene, one of the seven kings of Greece, drives out the tyrant who oppressed his country, II. 354. he commands the army against the Athenians, ibid. he challenges Phrynion their general to a single combat, and kills him, ibid. the inhabitants of Mitylene give him the sovereignty of their city, ibid. he voluntarily abdicates his authority at the expiration of ten years, and retires, 355. his death, ibid.

Places. Attack and defence of places by the ancients, II. 229, 231, III. 122, &c.
INDEX.

Plague, contagious distemper, III. 109. description of that disease, ibid.

Plataea, city of Bœotia, II. 275. the Plataeans acquire glory at the battle of Marathon, 425. they refuse to submit to Xerxes, 466. the Greeks decree the prize of valour to them after the defeat of Mardonius, 507. the Plataeans institute an anniversary festival in honour of those who died in the battle, 510. siege of Plataea by the Thebans, III. 99. Plataea besieged and taken by the Lacedæmonians, 124, 137. the Thebans demolish it entirely, 138, IV. 139. the Plataeans retire to Athens, ibid. they induce Alexander to destroy Thebes, 366. that prince permits them to rebuild their city, 486

Plato, philosopher of Athens: He retires to Mægara to avoid the rage of the Athenians, III. 46. Plato's travels into Sicily, where he appears for the first time at the court of Dionyfius the Younger, IV. 23. his intimacy and friendship with Dion, ibid. Plato's second voyage into Sicily, 58. wonderful change occasioned by his presence at the court of Dionyfius the Younger, 59. conspiracy of the courtiers to prevent its effects, 61. Plato quits the court, and returns into Greece, 64. adventure that happens to him at Olympia, 65. he returns to the court of Dionyfius the Younger, 67. Dionyfius differs with him, 68. he permits him to return into Greece, 69. Plato's death, 231

Plemmyrium, isle near Syracuse, III. 200

Plisearchus, son of Leonidas, king of Sparta, II. 529

Plisthenes, son of Atreus, king of Mycenæ, II. 283

Plistonax, king of Lacedæmonia, takes pains to cause a treaty to be concluded between Athens and Sparta, III. 162. his death, 270

Plutarch of Eretria calls in the Athenians to the aid of Eubœa, besieged by Philip, IV. 303. his perfidy, 305. Phocion drives him out of Eretria, ibid.

Pæcile, Πουκλίνα, gallery or porch of paintings at Athens, where the Stoicks used to assemble, II. 433

Poem, epic, II. 343, I. xcvi. dramatick, I. xvii. satyrick, cxii

Poësì. Greek poets, II. 342, &c. emulation of the poets in disputing the prizes in the Olympic games, I. xcv. poets who invented and improved tragedy and comedy, xcviii, cxii

Polemarch, magistrate at Athens, employed both to administer justice and command armies, II. 426, III. 521

Poliorcetes, name given Demetrius son of Antigonus, V. 196

Polyænus, senator of Syracuse, harangues the people upon the action of Andranadorus, after the death of Hieronymus, VII. 107

Polybidas; Lacedæmonian, is charged with the war against Olynthus, and takes that city, IV. 120

Polybius, Greek historian; his function at the funeral of Philips, VI. 190. he is chosen ambassador to Ptolemy Epiphanes
Polyperchon, Syracusan, in concert with Leptinus, kills Callippus, Dion's murderer, IV. 92

Polyphron is substitut'd to Japhon, tyrant of Pheræ his brother, IV. 161. he kills Polydorus his other brother, and is soon after killed himself by Alexander of Pheræ, ibid.

Polyperchon, one of the generals of Alexander's army, reduces a country called Bubacene, IV. 560. he ridicules a Persian for procrastinating himself before Alexander, 561. that prince causes him to be put in prison, and pardons him soon after, ibid.

Polyperchon takes the city of Ora, V. 10. he is appointed regent of the kingdom, and governor of Macedonia by Antipater, 151. he recalls Olympias, 154. he endeavours to secure Greece to himself, ibid. he is driven out of Macedonia by Cassander, 174. he causes Hercules the son of Alexander, and his mother Barsina to be put to death, 208

Polyestratus, Macedonian soldier, carries drink to Darius at the point of death, and receives his last words, IV. 508

Polyxenides, admiral of the fleet of Antiochus the Great, is defeated by Livius, and reduced to fly, VI. 114. he defeats Pausistratus, who commanded the fleet of Rhodes by a stratagem, 117. he is defeated by Amylius, and reduced to retire to Ephesus, 120

Polyxenus, brother-in-law of Dionysius, having declared a gainst that prince, flies to avoid falling into his hands, IV. 32

Polyzelus, brother of Hiero I. king of Syracuse, gives his brother umbrage, III. 80. Theron, his son-in-law, takes his part, ibid. peace
INDEX.

peace is made by the mediation of the poet Simonides, III. 80

Pompeius (L.) Roman officer, commands a small body of troops during the war with Perseus, and retires to an eminence, where he defends himself valiantly, VI. 326

Pompey succeeds Lucullus in the war against Mithridates, VII. 213. His conduct upon arriving in his government, 215. He offers Mithridates peace, 218. He gains several victories over that prince, 219. He marches into Armenia against Tigranes, who comes and surrenders himself to him, 221. He pursues Mithridates, and in his way subjects the Albanians and Iberians, 224. Tired of following Mithridates, he comes to Syria, of which he takes possession, and puts an end to the empire of the Seleucides, VI. 544. VII. 225. He marches to Pontus, 227. He returns into Syria, 228. Pompey's expeditions into Arabia, 229. and Judæa, 234. He takes Jerusalem, enters the temple, and the Sanctum Sanctorum, 16. After having reduced all the cities of Pontus, he returns to Rome, 235. He receives the honour of a triumph, ibid. After his defeat at Pharsalia, he retires into Egypt, 249. He is killed, 251

Pontus, kingdom of Asia minor, I. xxxi, clxxi. Chronological abridgment of the history of the kings of Pontus, clxxi

Popilius (C.) is sent ambassador into Egypt in order to put an end to the war there, VI. 252. He obliges Antiochus to quit Egypt, and leave the two Ptolemies, brothers, in quiet possession of it, 257. He is sent into Peloponnesus to publish the decree of the senate there in favour of the Greeks, 329

Porphyry, Tyrian, a learned pagan, declared enemy of Christianity, and the holy Scriptures, VI. 289

Porus, Indian king, refuses to submit to Alexander, V. 12. He is defeated and taken prisoner, 17, 21. Alexander restores him his dominions, 21

Pepis. Invention of posts and couriers, II. 154; 213, &c.

Pothinus, Ptolemy's minister, dethrones Cleopatra, VII. 249. He advises the death of Pompey, 250. He endeavours to render Caesar odious to the Egyptians, 253. He prevents the effect of Caesar's decree, and makes the Egyptians take arms against him, 255. Caesar causes him to death, 257

Potidaea, city of Macedonia, revolts against the Athenians, to whom it was tributary, III. 60. It is besieged and taken by the Athenians, ibid. 117. Philip takes that city from them, IV. 250

Poverty. Love of poverty instituted at Sparta, III. 495

Poverty, or Rule, the spirit of it how unbragious, VII. 144

Prexaspes, confident of Cambyses, kills Smerdis by that prince's order, II. 184. His base and monstrous flattery of Cambyses, 185. He promises the Magi to declare Smerdis the Magus the true son of Cyrus to the people, 192. He speaks to the people from the top of a tower, declares the contrary to them, throws himself down from the top of the tower, and is killed, ibid.

Priapatus, son and successor of Arbaces II. king of the Parthians, VII. 25

Priene,
INDEX.

Priene, city of Ionia, III. 57

Princes. See Kings.

Procles, son of Aristodemus, reigns at Sparta with his brother Eurythemenes, I. cxxxix

Proculeius, Roman officer, comes to Cleopatra in her retirement, and advises her to put herself into Cæsar’s hands, VII. 289. he makes himself master of the person of that princess, 290. Cæsar orders him to ask her what she desires of him, ibid.

Prodicos, name given by the Lacedaemonians to the guardians of the kings, I. cxlii

Proetus, king of Argos, II. 282

Promachus, one of Alexander’s officers, dies in a debauch with that prince, V. 52

Prosperity. Proof to which it puts the soul, II. 79. train of prosperity, III. 597

Protagoras, brother of Nicolas, expels Evagoras II. from Salamin, and reigns in his stead, IV. 223. Ochus confirms the possession of the throne to him, 227

Protagoras of Abdera, sophist; opinion of Protagoras concerning the Divinity, III. 191. the Athenians expel him their city, and cause his works to be burnt, 195

Proteas, Macedonian: Alexander drinks his health in the bowl of Hercules, V. 73

Proteus, king of Egypt, I. 75.

he stops Helen and her riches, and restores her to Menelaus, I. 75, &c.

Prothous, senator of Sparta, opposes the war with the Thracians, but is disregarded, IV. 141

Protagoras, famous painter. Demetrius’s regard for him during the siege of Rhodes, V. 247

Protomachus, one of the Athenian generals that gained the victory near the islands Arginusae, and were condemned at their return, III. 274, 279

Providentia. Discourse of Socrates upon Providence, III. 447

Proxenes of Beotia, commands a body of Grecian troops in the army of Cyrus the Younger against his brother Artaxerxes, III. 319. he is seized by treachery, and put to death, 341. character of Proxenes, 342

Prusias I. king of Bithynia, I. cxlii

Prusias II. king of Bithynia, surnamed the Hunter, declares for the Romans against Antiochus, VI. 119. he makes war against Eumenes, 192. services done him by Hannibal during that war, ibid. 193, I. 289.

Prusias agrees to deliver him up to the Romans, I. 289, VI. 193. he endeavours to induce the Romans to grant Perseus a peace, 336. his abject flattery in the senate, 404. war of Prusias with Attalus, 409. the Senate oblige him to lay down his arms, and to make Attalus satisfaction, ibid. Prusias intending to put his son Nicomedes to death, is killed by him, 411

Putant, name of the chief magistrate of Corinth, II. 285

Psammeneitus, king of Egypt, is conquered by Cambyses, who rules him with clemency, I. 101, II. 179. he endeavours to recede ascend the throne, and is put to death, I. 101, II. 180
PsAMMETICUS, one of the twelve kings, who reigned at the same time in Egypt, is banished into the fens, and on what occasion, I. 85. he defeats the other eleven kings, and remains sole monarch of Egypt, ibid. he makes war against the king of Assyria, 86. he besieges Azotus, and takes it after a siege of twenty-nine years, ibid. 87. he prevents the Scythians from invading Egypt, 87. his method for knowing whether the Egyptians were the most ancient people of the earth, ibid. &c.

PsAMMIS, king of Egypt, I. 91
PTOLEMAIDA, daughter of Ptolemy Soter, is married to Demetrius Poliorcetes, V. 277

PTOLEMY, son of Amyntas II. disputes the crown with Perdiccas, IV. 161. Pelopidas excludes him from the throne, 162, 254

PTOLEMY, son of Seleucus, is killed at the battle of Ipsus, IV. 410

PTOLEMY I. son of Lagus, one of Alexander's generals, takes several cities of India, V. 8. he is dangerously wounded at the siege of a city of India, 41. he is cured soon after, ibid. provinces which fall to him after the death of Alexander, 112. he causes the body of Alexander to be carried to Alexandria, 137. he enters into a league with Antipater, Craterus, and Antigonus, against Perdiccas and Eumenes, 140. he makes himself master of Syria, Phœnicia, and Judea, 149. he takes Jerusalem, 150. he forms a league with Seleucus, Cassander, and Lyphimachus, against Antigonus, 194. he seizes the island of Cyprus, 198. he defeats Demetrius in battle, 199. and makes himself master of Tyre, 200. defeat of one of his generals by Demetrius, 201. different expeditions of Ptolemy against Antigonus, 209. Ptolemy is defeated by Demetrius, who takes from him the isle of Cyprus, 224, &c.

Ptolemy assumes the title of king, V. 225. he sends aid to the Rhodians besieged by Demetrius, 237, 241. the Rhodians, in gratitude, give him the title of Soter, 247. Ptolemy allies himself with Seleucus, Cassander, and Lyphimachus, against Antigonus and Demetrius, 255. those four princes divide the empire of Alexander amongst them, 258. Ptolemy retakes the island of Cyprus from Demetrius, 258. he renews the league with Lyphimachus and Seleucus against Demetrius, 272. he abdicates the throne to his son Ptolemy Philadelphus, 282. death of Ptolemy Soter, 283. praise of that prince, ibid. famous library, which he caused to be erected at Alexandria, 283, 284

PTOLEMY II. surnamed PHILADELPHUS, is placed by his father Ptolemy Soter upon the throne of Egypt, V. 282. feaft which he gives the people on his accession to the crown, 288. the commencement of his reign, 301. his resentment against Demetrius Phalereus, ibid. he causes the holy Scriptures to be translated into Greek, to adorn his library, 319. he cultivates the amity of the Romans, 364. his liberality to the Roman ambassadors, 365. Ptolemy sends aid to the Athenians besieged by Antigonus, 367. revolt of Magas against Ptolemy, 368. the latter quells a conspiracy against against his person, V. 360. works of Ptolemy of advantage to commerce, 373. he comes to an accommodation with Magas, 374. war between Ptolemy and Antiochus, 375. peace between those princes, 377. death of Ptolemy Philadelphus, 383. character and qualities of that prince, ibid. his taste for arts and sciences, 375, 381. his application to make commerce flourish in his dominions, 373 Ptolemy III. surnamed Evergetes, succeeds his father Ptolemy Philadelphia, V. 383. he avenges the death of his sister Berenice, puts Laodice to death, and seizes part of Asia, 389, 390. in returning from that expedition he goes to Jerusalem, and offers sacrifices there to the God of Israel, 392. league of Antiochus Hierax and Seleucus Callinicus against Ptolemy, 394. the latter comes to an accommodation with Seleucus, 395. he caufes Antiochus to be feized, and imprisons him, 398. he augments the library of Alexandria, ibid. he gives Joseph, the nephew of Onias, the farm of the revenues of the provinces of Coelosyria, Phœnica, Judæa, and Samaria, 401. arrival of Cleomenes at the court of Egypt, 474. death of Ptolemy Evergetes, 475. Ptolemy's liberality to the Rhodians, 476 Ptolemy IV. surnamed Philopator, ascends the throne of Egypt after the death of Ptolemy Evergetes, V. 475, 478. injustice and cruelty of that prince to Cleomenes, 509, 510. Antiochus the Great undertakes to recover Coelosyria from Ptolemy, 483, 491. short truce between those two princes, 493. Ptolemy gains a great victory over Antiochus at Raphia, 496, 497. he comes to Jerusalem, 497. rage and revenge of Ptolemy against the Jews, because they refuse to let him enter into the sanctuary, 498. he grants Antiochus peace, 499. the Egyptians revolt against Philopator, 501. that prince gives himself up to all manner of excesses, 502. he puts Arinnae, his wife and father, to death, 503. he dies worn out with debauches, 597 Ptolemy V. called Epiphanes, at the age of five years ascends the throne of Egypt after the death of Ptolemy Philopator, VI. 1. Antiochus the Great and Philip enter into a league to invade his dominions, 4. Ptolemy is put under the guardianship of the Romans, 11. Aristomenes, the young king's guardian for the Romans, takes Palestine and Coelosyria from Antiochus, 26. Antiochus retakes those provinces, ibid. Scopas's conspiracy against Ptolemy frustrated by Aristomenes, 64. Ptolemy is declared at age, 65. he marries Cleopatra, daughter of Antiochus, 83. he makes an alliance with the Achaenæ, 168. he treats Hyrcanus, the son of Joseph, with great marks of favour and friendship, 169, &c. he takes a divert from Aristomenes, and puts him to death, 65, 170. he abandons himself to all sorts of excesses, 170. the Egyptians form several conspiracies against him, ibid. Ptolemy caufes Polycrates for his prime minister, ibid. with that minister's assistance he gets the better of the rebels, 171. he renews the alliance with the Achaenæ, ibid. he forms the design of attacking Seleucus, 200. the principal persons of his court poison him, ibid.
INDEX.

Ptolemy VI. called Philometor, at six years old, succeeds his father Ptolemy Epiphanes, VI. 201. cause of war arises between Ptolemy and Antiochus Epiphanes, 242. coronation of Ptolemy, 243. he is defeated by Antiochus, 245. he loses a second battle against Antiochus, and is taken prisoner, 247. the Alexandrians elect his brother Ptolemy Evergetes II. surnamed also Physcon, in his place, 249. Antiochus replaces Philometor in appearance upon the throne, 253. the two brothers unite and reign jointly, 254. the Romans prevent Antiochus from disturbing them, 257. Philometor is deposed by his brother Physcon, 463, 464. he goes to Rome to implore the Senate's clemency, 464. the Romans divide the kingdom of Egypt between the two brothers, 465. new differences arise between Philometor and Physcon, ibid. Physcon refuses to evacuate the island of Cyprus, 467. he gains a victory over Physcon, and takes him prisoner, 468. he pardons him, and restores him his dominions, ibid. he marries his daughter Cleopatra to Alexander Balas, 478. he permits Onias to build a temple for the Jews in Egypt, ibid. he marches to the aid of Alexander his son-in-law, attacked by Demetrius, 480. Apollonius's plot against Ptolemy, ibid. upon the refusal of Alexander to deliver up that traitor, Philometor takes his daughter from him, gives her to Demetrius, and aids him in ascending his father's throne, 481. Philometor's death, ibid. Ptolemy VII. called Evergetes II. and Physcon, son of Ptolemy Epiphanes, is placed by the Alexandrians upon the throne of Egypt in his eldest brother's stead, VI. 249. the two brothers unite and reign jointly, 254. they prepare to defend themselves against the attacks of Antiochus; ibid. the Romans oblige that prince to leave those two princes in tranquillity, 257. Physcon dethrones Philometor, 463, 464. the Romans divide the kingdom between the two brothers, 465. Physcon, dissatisfied with the part given to him, goes to Rome, and demands to be put in possession of the island of Cyprus, ibid. the Romans adjudge it to him, 466. the people of Cyrenaica oppose Physcon's entrance into their country, 467. that prince re-establishes himself in that country, and draws attempts against his life upon himself by his bad conduct, ibid. he makes a second voyage to Rome, and carries his complaints thither against his brother, ibid. he undertakes to make himself master of the island of Cyprus, 468. Philometor beats and takes him prisoner, and afterwards generously restores him his dominions, ibid. Physcon marries Cleopatra, the widow of Philometor, ascends the throne of Egypt, and puts his brother's son to death, VI. 482. Physcon's excess of folly and debauchery, 495. Scipio Africanus the Younger goes to that prince's court, 498. Physcon puts away Cleopatra, and marries her daughter, by Philometor, named also Cleopatra, 511. horrible cruelties which he commits in Egypt, ibid. a general revolt reduces him to quit that kingdom, 512. new cruelties of Physcon, ibid. he returns into Egypt, and reascends the throne, V. 514. he supports the impostor Alexander Zebina, and lends him an army to place him upon the throne of Syria, ibid. he gives his daughterTryphena in marriage to Grypus, 517. Phyicon's death, 519

PTOLEMY VIII. called LATHYRUS, succeeds his father Phyicon, VI. 519. Cleopatra his mother obliges him to repudiate his eldest sister, and marry Selena his youngest, 520. Lathyri sends Antiochus the Cyzicenian against John Hyrcanus, 523. Cleopatra takes her daughter Selena from Lathyri, and obliges him to quit Egypt, and content himself with the kingdom of Cyprus, 528. Lathyri sends an army to besiege Ptolemais, and marches in person against Alexander king of the Jews, over whom he gains a great victory, 529. barbarous action of Lathyri after the battle, ibid. he raises the siege of Ptolemais, 530. he makes an ineffectual attempt against Egypt, ibid. he is recalled by the Alexandrians, and replaced upon the throne of Egypt, 536. a rebellion rifes up against him in Egypt, 537. Lathyri destroys Thebes, whither the rebels had retired, ibid. he dies soon after, ibid.

PTOLEMY IX. king of Egypt. See ALEXANDER son of Phyicon.

PTOLEMY X. son of Alexander I. king of Egypt. See ALEXANDER II.

PTOLEMY XI. surnamed AULETES, is placed by the Alexandrians upon the throne of Egypt, in the room of Alexander II. VI. 545. he caueth himself to be declared the friend and ally of the Roman people by the credit of Cæsar and Pompey, VII. 237, 238. he oppress his subjects in consequence with taxations, 238. he is dethroned, ibid. the Alexandrians substitute his daughter Berenice in his place, ibid. he goes to Rome, and with money gains the suffrages of the principal persons of the commonwealth for his re-establishment, 240. he caueth most of the ambassadors, sent by the Egyptians to Rome to justify their revolt, to be murdered, ibid. an oracle of the Sybil is trumped up against him, 241. Gabinius reinstates him upon the throne, 246. Auletes puts his daughter Berenice to death, 247. his ingratitude and perfidy to Rabirius, ibid. death of Auletes, 248

PTOLEMY XII. son of Ptolemy Auletes, reigns after his father with his sister Cleopatra, VII. 248. he expels Cleopatra, 249. he caueth Pompey to be affililated by the advice of Theodotus, 250, 251. Cæsar makes himself judge between Ptolemy and Cleopatra, 253. he secures the person of Ptolemy, 254. he releases him, 259. Ptolemy reneweth the war against Cæsar, 260. he is defeated, and drowned in the Nile endeavouring to escape, 261

PTOLEMY I. king of Cyprus, brother of Ptolemy Auletes, is deposed by the Romans, who confiscate his treasures, VI. 552. he poisons himself, ibid.

PTOLEMY II. son of Ptolemy Auletes, is made king of Cyprus by Cæsar, VII. 255. Cæsar gives him the crown of Egypt jointly with Cleopatra, 261. death of Ptolemy, poisoned by that prince, 263

PTOLEMY, son of Anthony and Cleopatra, is proclaimed king of Syria by Anthony, VII. 275
INDEX.

Ptolemy Apion, natural son of Phyicon, is made king of Cyreneica by his father, VI. 519. he leaves his kingdom to the Romans at his death, 532

Ptolemy Ceresaus, or Thunder, son of Ptolemy Soter, quits the court, and retires first to Ly- simachus, and afterwards to Seleucus, V. 282, 304. he engages the latter in a war with Ly- simachus, 304. he assassimates Seleucus, and poises himself of his dominions, 308. he marries his sister Arsinoe, widow of Ly- simachus, and cauSES her two children by that prince to be murdered, 310, 311. he banishes her into Samothrace, 311. he is soon after punished for these parricides by the Gauls, who kill him in a battle, 312

Ptolemy Macron, governor of the island of Cyprus under Ptolemy Philometor, revolts against that prince, enters into the ser- vice of Antiochus Epiphanes, and gives him possession of the island of Cyprus, VI. 246. Antiochus gives him a share in his confidence, and the government of Cœlophylus and Palaistine, ibid. he marches against the Jews, and is defeated by Judas Mac- cabeus, 272. he becomes a friend to the Jews, 459. An- tiochus Eupator deprives him of his government, ibid. Pto- lemy, through despair, poisons himself, ibid.

Ptolemy, son of Pyrrhus, is killed in a battle against the Lacedaemonians, V. 358

Ptolemy, one of the principal officers of Philip, unites with Apelles in his conspiracy against that prince, V. 531, 533. Phi- lip causes him to be put to death, 536

Pul, king of the Assyrians, who does penance upon the preach- ing of Jonah, II. 22

Pulcher (P. Claudius) conful, is beaten at sea by Adherbal the Carthaginian general, I. 194

Punick: Origin and signification of that word, I. 103. Punick wars, 175, 211, 302

Pydna, city of Macedonia, is sub- jected by Philip, IV. 250. fa- mous victory gained by Paulus Æmilius over Perseus, near that city, VI. 359

Pylageri, among the Greeks, who, IV. 313

Pylos, a small city of Messenia, taken by the Athenians during the Peloponnesian war, III. 139

Pyramid. Description of the py- ramids of Egypt, I. 6, 78. judg- ment to be formed of those fa- mous structures, 8

Pyrrhias, general of the Ætol- lians, is twice beaten by Philip, V. 554

Pyrrhus, son of Æacides king of Epirus, flies from the fury of the revolted, V. 165; he is re-etab- lished upon the throne of Epis- rus by GlaucaS king of Illyrium, ibid. the Molossians revolt a- gainst him, and plunder all his rickes, ibid. he retires to De- metrius, son of Antigonus, ibid. he distinguishes himself at the battle of Ipsus, 257, 266. he goes to Egypt as an hostage for Demetrius, 266. he marries An- tigone, daughter of Barenice, ibid. Ptolemy gives him a fleet and money, of which he makes use for repoffecting himself of his dominions, ibid. Pyrrhus takes Macedonia from Demet- rius, and is declared king of it, 272. he divides that kingdom with Lysimachus, 275. he is soon obliged to quit it, 276. the Ta- rentines call in Pyrrhus to their aid against the Romans; 323, 324. K R that that prince goes to Italy, V. 326, 327. he defeats the con-ful Levinius, 331. he causes proposal of peace to be made to the Romans, 332. conversation of Pyrrhus with Fabriicus, 335.
Pyrrhus gains a second advantage over the Romans, 343.
expeditions of Pyrrhus in Sicily, 345, I. 175. he returns into Italy, V. 34. he plunder the temple of Proserpine in the country of the Locrians, 348.
he is defeated by the Romans, 349, 350. he returns into Epirus, 350. he throws himself into Macedonias, and makes himself master of it for a time,
after having defeated Antigonus, ibid. 351. expedition of Pyrrhus into Peloponnecusus, 353. he besieges Sparta ineffectually, ibid.
he is killed at the siege of Argos, 361, 362. good and bad characters of Pyrrhus, 274, 273, 362, 367.

Pythagoras, Lacedaemonian, commands part of the fleet of Cyrus the Younger, in the expedition of that prince against his brother Artaxerxes, III. 319

Pythagoras, son of Evagoras, defends the city of Salamin besieged by Artaxerxes, during his father's absence, III. 411, 412

Pythagoras, philospher, III.
88. he goes to Italy and settles at Crotona, where he opens a School of philosophy, ibid. novicate of silence which he made his discipline observe, 89

Pythagoras of Cyzicus gains the favour of Cyrus, who gives him the revenues of seven cities for a pension, II. 220

Pytheas, magistrate of the Bretians, induces them to unite their forces against the Romans, VI.
427, 428. Metellus puts him to death, 429

Pytheas, famous astronomer and geographer, VI. 417
Pythias, name of the priestess of Apollo at Delphi, I. 111
Pythian, celebrated games of Greece, I. lxv

Pythias, friend of Damon: Trial to which their friendship was put,
IV. 50, 51

Pythius, Lydian prince, generous offer which he makes Xer-exes of his riches, II. 453. means which the princecs his wife uses to make him sensible of the injustice and ridicule of his conduct, 454. cruelty which Py-thius experiences from Xerxes,
ibid.

Pythodorus, sent by the Athenians to the aid of the Leonites, is banished for not having undertaken the conquest of Sicily,
III. 175

Pythion of Byzantium, famous rhetorician, is deputed by Philip to the Thebans to incline them to peace, IV. 322

Quo vt. See Difius.

R.

Abrius Posthumus, Roman knight, goes to Ptolemy Auleter, in order to be paid the sums he had lent that prince at Rome, VI. 247. peridy of Ptolemy in respect to him, ibid.
Rabirius is accused at Rome of having assisted Ptolemy in cor-ruputing the senate, ibid. Cicero takes his defence upon him, 248

Races. See Course.

Ragan, name of the plain where Nabucodonosor conquered Phar-ortes, II. 51

Rameses-Miamun, king of Egpyt, I. 67. he makes the Israelites suffer infinite hardships,
ibid.

Rammus,
INDEX

RAMMUS, citizen of Brundusium, is ordered by Perseus to poison Eumenes, VI. 300. he goes to Valerius at Chelcis, discovers the whole to him, and follows him to Rome, ibid.

Raphia, city of Palestine, near which Antiochus the Great was defeated by Ptolemy Philopator, V. 496

Reading, of history especially: Of what use it is to a prince, IV. 357. delicacy of the Lacedemonians in respect to the books that youth were to be suffered to read, II. 347, 348

Regillus (L. Äemilus) is charged with the command of the Roman fleet in the room of Livius, VI. 115. he gains a compleat victory over Polyxenides, Antiochus's admiral, 120. he receives the honour of a triumph, 143

Regulus (M. Ätilius) consul, gains a great victory over the Carthaginians with his fleet, I. 180. he goes to Africa, ibid. the Romans continue him in the command as proconsul, 181. he defeats the Carthaginians, and seizes Tunis, 182. he suffers himself to be dazzled by his glorious successes, 183. he is defeated and taken prisoner by the Carthaginians, 186, &c. the Carthaginians send him to Rome to propose the exchange of prisoners, 189. at his return they put him to a cruel death, 190

Religion. Origin and source of the religion of the ancients, I. xxxiii, &c. attention of the ancients in discharging all the duties of religion, II. 512. the veil of religion often serves to cover the most criminal designs, and the most unjust enterprises, III. 155, IV. 287

Resomithras, one of the chiefs of the revolt against Artaxerxes. Mius, delivers up the principal rebels to that prince, to make his own peace, and keeps the money which he had brought from Egypt for the confederacy, IV. 193

Resurrection of the body. Confused notion which the ancients had of the resurrection of the body, III. 277

Retreat of the ten thousand Greeks after the battle of Cunaxa, III. 343, &c.

Rhadamantus, brother of Minos, is appointed by that prince to administer justice in his capital city, III. 504

Rhamspinitus, king of Egypt, 1. 77

Rhégium, city of Sicily, forms a league against Dionysius, IV. 18. it makes peace with that tyrant, ibid. its refusal to give him a wife, and the insolent answer with which that refusal is attended, 21, 22. Dionysius besieges it out of revenge, 35. miserable fate of that city, 36. a Roman legion by the aid of the Mamertines comes and settlesthere, after having expelled the inhabitants, I. 175. the Romans re-establish the inhabitants, 176

Rhésiæus, Achæan, obliges his son Memnon, who was chief magistrate, by menaces not to oppose the treaty with the Romans, VI. 36

Rhodes, island and city of Asia minor, I. xxxi. Rhodes takes arms against Athens, IV. 207. it is declared free, 214. it is subjected by Mausolus king of Caria, 218, 219. the Rhodians undertake to dethrone Artemisia widow of that prince, 220. that prince's takes their city, 221. the death of Artemisia re-establishes their liberty, 222. the Rhodes.
INDEX.

Rhine, river. Passage of the Rhone by Hannibal, I. 222
Rhyme. See Rythmus.
Richeleu (Cardinal) composed dramatick poems, and piqued himself upon excelling that way, IV. 39, 40
Riches, contempt which the ancient Scythians had for riches, II. 386
Romans. First treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, I. 141. the Romans send deputies to enquire into the laws of the cities of Greece, II. 541. second treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, I. 156. war between the Romans and Pyrrhus, V. 323, &c. they are defeated in two battles by that prince, 331, 343. they gain a great victory over Pyrrhus, and oblige him to quit Italy, 349, 350. they punish their citizens who had settled in Rhegium, I. 175. they send ambassadors to Ptolemy Philadelpus, and make an alliance with that prince, V. 364, 365. they aid the Masmertines against the Carthaginians, I. 176. they make an alliance with Hiero king of Syracuse, VII. 35. they form the design of fitting out a fleet for the first time, I. 178. they beat the Carthaginians, first near the coast of Myle, and afterwards near Ecnoma, 179, 180. they go to Africa, 180. they are at first victorious, and afterwards defeated, 181, 186. they defeat the Carthaginian fleet in sight of Sicily, 191. they go to Sicily, and form the siege of Lilybaeum, ibid. 192. they are defeated at sea, 194. they gain a great victory over the Carthaginians, to whom they grant peace, 195, 197
The Romans take Sardinia from the Carthaginians, I. 211.

Rhododes, daughter of Mithridates king of the Parthians, is married to Demetrius king of Syria, VI. 491

Rhodians besiege their city, 231. he raises the siege a year after by a peace very honourable for the Rhodians, 245, 246. he makes them a present of all the machines of war, which he had employed in that siege, 246. the Romans erect the famous Colossus, with the money raised by the sale of those machines, ibid. their impious flattery of Ptolemy, to express their gratitude for the aid he had given them during that siege, ibid. 247. great earthquake at Rhodes, 475, 476. emulation of the neighbouring princes in consoling that afflicted city, 476, VII. 93. destruction of the famous Colossus, V. 476. war between the Rhodians and Byzantines, and the causes of it, 490. peace is restored between the two people, ibid. war between the Rhodians and Philip, VI. 4 they defeat Hannibal at sea, 118. dispute between the Rhodians and Eumenes before the Romans concerning the Grecian cities of Asia, 134, &c. the Rhodians signalize their zeal for Rome in the war with Perseus, 368. they send ambassadours to Rome, and to the Roman army in Macedonia, who speak there in favour of Perseus with extraordinary insolence, 336, 355. they send deputies to Rome, who endeavour to appease the anger of the senate, 391. after long and warm solicitations, they prevail to be admitted into the alliance of the Roman people, 396

INDEX.

ans refuse to aid Antigonus against Ptolemy, V. 230. Demetrius besieges their city, 231. he raises the siege a year after by a peace very honourable for the Rhodians, 245, 246. he makes them a present of all the machines of war, which he had employed in that siege, 246. the Romans erect the famous Colossus, with the money raised by the sale of those machines, ibid. their impious flattery of Ptolemy, to express their gratitude for the aid he had given them during that siege, ibid. 247. great earthquake at Rhodes, 475, 476. emulation of the neighbouring princes in consoling that afflicted city, 476, VII. 93. destruction of the famous Colossus, V. 476. war between the Rhodians and Byzantines, and the causes of it, 490. peace is restored between the two people, ibid. war between the Rhodians and Philip, VI. 4. they defeat Hannibal at sea, 118. dispute between the Rhodians and Eumenes before the Romans concerning the Grecian cities of Asia, 134, &c. the Rhodians signalize their zeal for Rome in the war with Perseus, 368. they send ambassadours to Rome, and to the Roman army in Macedonia, who speak there in favour of Perseus with extraordinary insolence, 336, 355. they send deputies to Rome, who endeavour to appease the anger of the senate, 391. after long and warm solicitations, they prevail to be admitted into the alliance of the Roman people, 396

Rhododes, daughter of Mithridates king of the Parthians, is married to Demetrius king of Syria, VI. 491

Rhine, river. Passage of the Rhone by Hannibal, I. 222
Rhyme. See Rythmus.
Richeleu (Cardinal) composed dramatick poems, and piqued himself upon excelling that way, IV. 39, 40
Riches, contempt which the ancient Scythians had for riches, II. 386
Romans. First treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, I. 141. the Romans send deputies to enquire into the laws of the cities of Greece, II. 541. second treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, I. 156. war between the Romans and Pyrrhus, V. 323, &c. they are defeated in two battles by that prince, 331, 343. they gain a great victory over Pyrrhus, and oblige him to quit Italy, 349, 350. they punish their citizens who had settled in Rhegium, I. 175. they send ambassadors to Ptolemy Philadelpus, and make an alliance with that prince, V. 364, 365. they aid the Masmertines against the Carthaginians, I. 176. they make an alliance with Hiero king of Syracuse, VII. 35. they form the design of fitting out a fleet for the first time, I. 178. they beat the Carthaginians, first near the coast of Myle, and afterwards near Ecnoma, 179, 180. they go to Africa, 180. they are at first victorious, and afterwards defeated, 181, 186. they defeat the Carthaginian fleet in sight of Sicily, 191. they go to Sicily, and form the siege of Lilybaeum, ibid. 192. they are defeated at sea, 194. they gain a great victory over the Carthaginians, to whom they grant peace, 195, 197
The Romans take Sardinia from the Carthaginians, I. 211.

Rhododes, daughter of Mithridates king of the Parthians, is married to Demetrius king of Syria, VI. 491

Rhine, river. Passage of the Rhone by Hannibal, I. 222
Rhyme. See Rythmus.
Richeleu (Cardinal) composed dramatick poems, and piqued himself upon excelling that way, IV. 39, 40
Riches, contempt which the ancient Scythians had for riches, II. 386
Romans. First treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, I. 141. the Romans send deputies to enquire into the laws of the cities of Greece, II. 541. second treaty between the Romans and Carthaginians, I. 156. war between the Romans and Pyrrhus, V. 323, &c. they are defeated in two battles by that prince, 331, 343. they gain a great victory over Pyrrhus, and oblige him to quit Italy, 349, 350. they punish their citizens who had settled in Rhegium, I. 175. they send ambassadors to Ptolemy Philadelpus, and make an alliance with that prince, V. 364, 365. they aid the Masmertines against the Carthaginians, I. 176. they make an alliance with Hiero king of Syracuse, VII. 35. they form the design of fitting out a fleet for the first time, I. 178. they beat the Carthaginians, first near the coast of Myle, and afterwards near Ecnoma, 179, 180. they go to Africa, 180. they are at first victorious, and afterwards defeated, 181, 186. they defeat the Carthaginian fleet in sight of Sicily, 191. they go to Sicily, and form the siege of Lilybaeum, ibid. 192. they are defeated at sea, 194. they gain a great victory over the Carthaginians, to whom they grant peace, 195, 197
The Romans take Sardinia from the Carthaginians, I. 211.
they drive Teuta out of Illy-rium, V. 420. they send a solemn embassy into Greece to notify their treaty with the Illyris, ibid. the Corinthians admit them to the Isthmian games, and the Athenians grant them the freedom of their city, ibid. the Romans drive Demetrius of Pharos out of Illyrium, 514. they send ambassadors to demand him of Philip, who re-sues to deliver him up, ibid. they declare war against the Carthaginians, I. 219. they are defeated near the Ticinus, 232.
near Trebia, 235. and the lake of Thrasyemene, 241. they make several conquests in Spain, 247. they lose a great battle near Canna, 252. Hannibal besieges Rome, 259. the Romans are defeated in Spain, 261. they gain a great battle over Afrubal, 263. they go to Africa, 266. they defeat the Carthaginians near Zima, oblige them to demand peace, and grant it then, 272, 273.

The Romans send deputies to Ptolemy and Cleopatra to renew their ancient alliance with Egypt, V. 501. they gain an advantage over Philip at Apollonia, 545. they break with Hieronymus, VII. 105. upon the news of that prince's death they send Marcellus into Sicily, 106. that general takes Syracusae, 131. alliance of the Romans with the Ætolians, V. 549. the Romans send Sulpitius to the aid of the Ætolians against Philip, 554. various expeditions of that prætor in Macedonia, 555, 567. general peace between the Romans and Philip, in which the allies on both sides are included, 591. the Romans accept the guardianhip of Ptolemy Epiphanes,

VI. 10. they declare war against Philip, 13. they defeat that prince in a battle, 21. they employ their credit with Anticochus to induce him not to make war with Attalus, 25, 26. expeditions of the Romans in Phociis, 31. they make a treaty with Nabis, 41. they gain a famous victory over Philip near Scutusla and Cynocephale, 49. they grant that prince peace, 54. they reinstate Greece in its ancient liberty, 55.

The Romans send an emba-sy to Antiochus, VI. 62. it tends only to dispose both sides to an open rupture, 63. they make war against Nabis, 67. they oblige him to demand peace, and grant it to him, 74. preparations on all sides for a war between the Romans and Antiochus, 79. mutual embasies on both sides without effect, ibid. the Romans send troops against Nabis, who had broken the treaty, 87. they declare war against Antiochus, 103. they gain an advantage over that prince at Thermopylae, 107. they defeat Polyxenides, Anti-cochus's admiral, on two occasions, 114, 120. they go to Asia, and gain a great victory over Antiochus near Magnesia, 123, 130. they grant him peace, 132. they reduce the Ætolians, and grant them peace, 150. they subject the Gauls of Ais, 156. &c. complaints against Philip carried to Rome, 174. the Romans send commissaries to examine into those complaints, and to take cognizance of the ill treatment of Sparta by the Achaæans, ibid. new complaints carried to Rome against Philip, 201. the Romans send back his son Demetrius with ambassadors, 202. they favour the

[Page 3]
INDEX.

Magniatta, who was at war with the Carthaginians, I. 306.

The Romans send ambassadors into Macedonia, to have an eye upon the conduct of Perseus, VI. 293. they break with that prince, 302. the war is declared in form, 311. the Romans are worsted near the river of Peneus, 319. the senate makes a wise decree to put a stop to the avarice of the generals and magistrates, who oppressed the allies, 327. the Romans penetrate into Macedonia, 331, &c. they conquer Gentius king of Illyrium, 353. they gain a great victory over Perseus near the city of Pydna, 365. that prince is taken with his children, 372. decree of the senate, which grants liberty to the Macedonians and Illyrians, 375. the Romans oblige Antiochus Epiphanes to quit Egypt, and to leave the two reigning brothers in peace, VI. 257. their cruel treatment of the Aetolians, 397. all in general who had favoured Perseus are cited to Rome, to answer for their conduct there, 398. a thousand Achaean carried thither, 400. the senate banishes them into several towns of Italy, 401. after seventeen years of banishment, they are sent back into their own country, 403. they refuse Eumenes entrance into Rome, 405. the Romans divide the kingdom of Egypt between Philometor and Pthylon, 465. one of their ambassadors is killed in Syria, 469.

The Romans declare the Jews their friends and allies, VI. 472. they acknowledge Demetrius king of Syria, 473. they conquer the Ligurians, and give their territory to the Marcellians, 415. they defeat Antiochus, and two more adventurers, who had possessed themselves of Macedonia, and reduce that kingdom into a Roman province, 420, 423. they declare war against the Carthaginians, I. 306. they order them to abandon Carthage, 308. they besiege that city, and demolish it entirely, 311, 315. decree of the senate for separating several cities from the Achaean league, VI. 424. &c. troubles in Achaia, 427. the Romans defeat the Achaean, and take Thebes, 428, 429. they gain another victory over the Achaean, take Corinth, and burn it, 430, 431. they reduce Greece into a Roman province, 432. they renew the treaties made with the Jews, 489, 494. they inherit the riches and dominions of Attalus king of Pergamus, 501. they reduce Arfionicus, who had possessed himself of them, 502. war of the Romans against Jugurtha, L 343. Ptolemy Apion king of Cyrenaica, and Nicomedes king of Bithynia, leave the Romans their dominions at their deaths, VI. 532, 537, 538. the Romans reduce those kingdoms into Roman provinces, 532, 538.

The Romans re-establish the kings of Cappadocia and Bithynia, expelled by Mithridates, VII. 148. massacre of all the Romans and Italians in Asia minor, 154. the Romans gain three great battles against the generals of Mithridates, 159, 166, 168. they grant that prince peace, 172. second war of the Romans with Mithridates, 175. they are defeated by that prince in a battle, 181. they gain a great victory over him, and reduce him to retire into Armenia to Tigranes his son-in-law, 187, 196.
Roman

I.

Wherein

II.

IV.

Rosaces, governor of Lydia and Ionia, commands a detachment of Ochus's army in that prince's expedition against Egypt, IV. 227, 228

Rosaces, Persian lord, gives proofs of his valour at the battle of the Granicus, IV. 380

INDEX.

166. they declare war against Tigranes, and defeat him in a battle, VII. 260. second victory of the Romans over the united forces of Mithridates and Tigranes, 208. they again gain several victories over Mithridates, who had recovered his dominions, 219. they subject Tigranes king of Armenia, 221, 222. they drive Antiochus Asiaticus out of Syria, and reduce that kingdom into a Roman province, 225, 349

The Romans are declared heirs of his dominions by the will of Alexander king of Egypt, VI. 547. end of the war with Mithridates, VII. 232. the Romans drive Ptolemy out of Cyprus, and confiscate his treasures, VI. 552. they invade Parthia, and are defeated, VII. 28, &c. they declare Ptolemy Auletes their friend and ally, 237. they reduce Egypt into a Roman province, 195. Cappadocia is also reduced into a Roman province, 76. reflection upon the conduct of the Romans in respect to the states of Greece, and the kings both of Europe and Asia, VI. 144. strokes of the Roman policy, 193, 198, 388, 391, 403, 456. difference between the Romans and the Greeks, 441. Roman haughtiness, 237. setting out of the consul and army, 311, 312. difference of taste of the Romans and Greeks in respect to shows, I. xc

Rosaces, sifter of Siatira, queen of Persia. Tragical history of that princes, III. 297, 298

Roxana, daughter of Oxyartes, wife of Alexander, IV. 560. she is delivered of a son soon after Alexander's death, V. 112. she causes Siatira, Alexander's widow, as well as herself, to be put to death with Dr. paxis, Hepheestion's widow, 115. Cae- fander deprives her of all the honours of a queen, and soon after puts her to death, 176, 177, 208

Roxana, sifter of Mithridates, VII. 188. deplorable end of that prince, 189

Rustem, or Time, term of mischief: Wheiren it consists, II. 257

S.

Sabaecus, king of Ethiopia, enters Egypt, and conquers it, I. 80. at the expiration of fifty years he retires voluntarily into Ethiopia, 81

Sabaenus, sict of idolaters in the East, II. 252

Sabaecus, powerful people of India, subjected by Alexander, V.

Saca, Scythian nation, conquered by Alexander, V. 546

Saca, people of Assyria, subjected by Cyrus, II. 103

Sadduccees, a powerful sect among the Jews; some account of them, VI. 526

Sadymet, king of Lydia, II. 60. he besieges Miletus, ibid.

Sages. Abridgment of the lives of the seven sages of Greece, II. 562

Seguntum, city of Spain, besieged and taken by Hannibal, I. 218

Sais, city of the Lower Egypt, I. 22

K k 4

Samin,
INDEX.

Salamin, capital city of the island of Cyprus, III. 412

Salamin, isle of Greece, famous for the battle at sea between Xerxes and the Greeks, II. 276, 484

Salmanasar, king of Nineveh, II. 28. He conquers Hophra king of Samaria, loads him with chains, and destroys the kingdom of Israel, ibid. death of Salmanasar, ibid.

Salome, wife of Ariobarzus I., takes the three princes, her husband’s brothers, out of prison, VII. 4

Samaria, city of Palestine, the capital of the kingdom of Israel, I. xxxii. origin of the enmity between the Samaritans and Jews, 32. the Samaritans oppose the Jews at the time they are rebuilding the temple of Jerusalem, 158, 190, 375. they submit to Alexander, IV. 450. they cannot obtain the same privileges of that prince as the Jews, 459. theymutiny, 469. Alexander drives them out of Samaria, ibid. they conform to the religion of Antiochus Epi-phanes, VI. 260. destruction of Samaria by Hyrcanus, 523

Sambucus, machine of war of the ancients, VII. 118

Samos, isle and city of Ionia, II. 276, 288. Samos taken and destroyed by the Athenians, III. 57. Lyfander re-establishes the ancient inhabitants in it, 291. impious flattery of that Lacedæmonian by the Samians, 312

Samothrace, isle of the Archipelago, considered as sacred and inviolable, VI. 370

Sandrocotta, Indian, possesses himself of all the provinces of India, which Alexander had conquered, V. 251. Seleucus undertakes to drive him out of them, 251. those two princes come to an accommodation, ibid.

Sangala, city of India, taken and entirely demolished by Alexander, V. 24

Saoduchin, king of Babylon, See Nabuchodonosor I.

Sappho of Mytilene, surnamed the tenth Muse, II. 351

Saracens, king of Assyria, II. 32. revolt of Nabopolassar against that prince, ibid. death of Saracens, 54

Sardanapalus, king of Assyria, II. 23. his effeminacy, ibid. his death, 24

Sardinia, isle of Europe in the Mediterranean, subjected by the Carthaginians, I. 135. and afterwards by the Romans, 213

Sardis, a city of Lydia, subjected by Cyrus, II. 123. it is taken and burnt by Aristagoras and the Athenians, 409, 410. Alexander takes it, IV. 382

Saratæ, name given the governors of provinces amongst the Per-ians, II. 208, III. 363

Saturn, Pagan divinity, I. 106

Satyr, sort of poem, I. xcvi

Sawd, the ancient Thebais of Egypt

Scamnia, name given the place where the Athletæ combated, I. lxxvii

Scarpus, general of Anthony’s army in Lybia, declares for Caesar, VII. 283

Scaurus, Pompey’s lieutenant, reduces Syria and Damascus, VII. 225, 226

Scaurus (Æmilius) is deputed by the Romans to Jugurtha, I. 341. he souses himself to be corrupted by that prince, ibid.

Scene or Stage, part of the theatre of the ancients, I. xcvi Scrediledes, king of Illyrium, exercises a kind of piracy at the expense of all his neighbours, V.

V. 419. he joins the Achaeans against the Aetolians, 513. he makes an alliance with the Romans, 552

Scipio (Publius) marches into Spain against Hannibal, I. 224. he passes the Po, and is defeated near the Ticinus, 231. he is sent into Spain, and joins his brother Cn. Scipio there, 247. they make a great progress there, ibid. 258. they divide their troops, 261. Publius is killed in a battle, ibid. Scipio (Cneus) is sent by his brother into Spain, to make head against Asdrubal, I. 225. the two brothers join each other, and have great successes, 247, 258. they divide their troops, 261. Cneus is killed in a battle, 262

Scipio (P. Cornelius) surnamed Africanus, makes himself master of all Spain, I. 266. he is elected consul, and goes to Africa, ibid. he has an interview with Hannibal, and gains a great victory over that general, 270. &c. he grants the Carthaginians peace, 273. conversation between Scipio and Hannibal at Ephesus, 285. &c. VI. 85. Scipio serves as lieutenant to his brother L. Cornelius Scipio in the war with Antiochus, 115. he rejects the offers of Antiochus, 124. 125. Scipio's death, I. 291

Scipio (L. Cornelius) surnamed Asiaticus, is charged with the war against Antiochus, VI. 115. he goes to Asia, 123. he gains a famous victory over Antiochus near Magnesia, 126, 130. he triumphs, 143

Scipio Nasica, son-in-law of Scipio Africanus, is charged with an important expedition by Paulus Amilius, which he executes highly for his honour, VI. 357. he is sent into Macedonia, to appease the troubles excited by Andrieus, 421

Scipio (Publius) surnamed Africanus the Younger, distinguishes himself in the war with Carthage, I. 312. he returns to Rome to demand the office of edile, 314. the people give him the consulship, ibid. Scipio goes to Africa, and advances against Carthage, ibid. he takes that city and demolishes it, 320, 321, 324. he is sent ambassador into Egypt, Syria, and Greece, VI. 497. use which he makes of the presents sent him by Antiochus Sidetes, 506, 507. character and praise of Scipio, I. 327. his intimate friendship with Polybius, 328

Scismas, eldest son of Datames, becomes his accuser to Artaxerxes, III. 426

Scopas is placed at the head of the troops in Eolia in the war against the Achaeans, V. 507. he ravages Macedonia, 515. he prevails upon the Aetolians to make an alliance with the Romans, 550. he goes into the service of Ptolemy Epiphanes king of Egypt, VI. 26. he possesst himself of Judaea, ibid. he is defeated by Antiochus, and obliged to accept ignominious conditions, 27. he conspires against Ptolemy, and is put to death, 64

Scorpion, machine of war, VII. 119

Scylax, Greek of Caryandia, is commissioned by Darius to discover India, II. 403. he acquires himself happily of that commission, ibid.

Scylurus, king of the Scythians: in what manner he recommended unity to his children, II. 387

Scytale,
INDEX.

Sectyle, used among the Lacedaemonians. What it was, II. 307

Scythians. They possess themselves of Upper Asia, II. 52. they are driven out of it at the end of twenty-eight years, 53. Darius designs to punish them for that irruption, 391. the Scythians refuse to submit, 396. they send an herald to Darius with presents, 397. they ravage Thracia, 402. they send ambassadors to Alexander, who speak to him with extraordinary freedom, IV. 541. they are defeated and subdued by that prince, 545. they make war with Phraates to revenge his injustice, defeat him in a battle, and ravage his kingdom, VI. 510, 511. manners of the Scythians according to Herodotus, II. 383. manners and character of the ancient Scythians according to Justin, 385. in what time luxury got ground amongst them, 390

Scythopolis, city of the tribe of Ma.nasseh, II. 53

Sea. Red Sea. The passage of the Red Sea manifestly meant by a passage in Diodorus Siculus, I. 68

Seats of idolaters in the East, II. 251. different seats of philosophers. See Philosophers.

Sicily, city of Sicily, puts itself under the protection of the Carthaginians, I. 144

Seleucia, city of Seleucus Palænus, famous for the battle between Antigonus and Cleomenes, V. 465

Selena, daughter of Ptolemy Phynéon and Cleopatra, is compelled by her mother to marry her brother Lathyrus, VI. 520. Cleopatra makes her quit Lathyrus, and gives her in marriage to Antiochus Grypus, 527.

Selena, after the death of Grypus, marries Antiochus Eusebes, 534. Eusebes having been driven out of his dominions, she keeps possession of Ptolemais with part of Phoenicia and Cœle Syria, and reigns there many years, 536. she conceives hopes of ascending the throne of Egypt, 538. she sends her two sons to Rome with that view, ibid.

Seleucia, city of Syria, built by Seleucus Nicator, V. 261

Seleucia, city situate upon the Tigris, built by Seleucus Nicator, V. 270

Seleucides. Famous sea of the Seleucides, V. 203. end of the empire of the Seleucides in Asia, VII. 226

Seleucus Nicator is placed at the head of all the cavalry of the allies after the death of Alexander, V. 113. he is setted by Antipater in the government of Babylon, 146. he joins Antigonus and Ptolemy against Eumenes, 171. he escapes from Babylon, and retires into Egypt, 193. he forms a league with Ptolemy, Lysimachus, and Cæsander, against Antigonus, 194. he makes himself master of Babylon, 202. he assumes the title of king, 226. he strengthens himself upon the throne of Syria, ibid. he makes an expedition into India, 251. league between Seleucus, Ptolemy, Cæsander, and Lysimachus, against Antigonus and Demetrius, 255. Seleucus commands the army of the confederates, and gains a famous victory near Ipli, 256, 257. the four victorious princes divide the empire of Alexander the Great amongst them, 258. Seleucus bates several cities, 261. he makes an alliance with Demetrius, 262. he quarrels with with him, and takes Cilicia from him, V. 263, 268. he builds Seleucia, 270. he forms a league with Ptolemy, Lyphimachus, and Pyrrhus, against Demetrius, 272. he gets that prince's person into his hands, 279. he gives his wife and part of his dominions to his son Antiochus, 304, 305. he makes war against Lyphimachus, defeats him in battle, and possessed himself of all his dominions, 307. he is assassinated by Ceraunus, whom he had laden with favours, 308. character of Seleucus, 309.

Seleucus Callinicus ascends the throne of Syria after his father Antiochus Theos, poisoned by Laodice, V. 387, 388. he endeavours to retake what Ptolemy had conquered from him, and is unsuccessful on several occasions, 392. he unites with his brother Hierax against Ptolemy, 394. war between the two brothers, 395. Seleucus marches against Arfaces, 399. he is taken prisoner, ibid. death of Seleucus, 402.

Seleucus Ceraunus succeeds his father Seleucus Callinicus, V. 479. he is poisoned by two of his principal officers, ibid.

Seleucus Philopator is left by his father Antiochus the Great to govern Syria during his absence, VI. 161. he ascends the throne of Syria, 168. he sends Heliodorus to Jerufalem to bring away its treasures, 235, 236. Heliodorus caueth to be poisoned, 238.

Seleucus, the son of Demetrius Nicator, caueth himself to be declared king of Syria, VI. 516. his mother Cleopatra kills him with her own hands, ibid. Seleucus, eldest son of Antiochus Grypus king of Syria, succeeds him, VI. 532. he supports himself against Antiochus the Cyzicenian, 532. he is driven out of his dominions by Eusbebes, and burnt in Mopsuestia, 538.

Seleucus Cybiosactes, son of Antiochus Eusbebes and Seleuceia, he goes to Rome to solicit the senate for his mother, VI. 540. he accepts the crown of Egypt and Berenice, VII. 245. he renders himself odious by his base inclinations, ibid. Berenice causes him to be put to death, ibid.

Seleucus, governor of Pelaum for Cleopatra, delivers up that city to Caesar by order of that queen, VII. 285, 286.

Seleucia, city of Sicily, III. 178. destruction of that city by Hannibal, I. 145.

Semiramis, queen of Assyria: Her birth, II. 8. she marries Ninus, ibid. manner in which she ascends the throne, ibid. she visits all the parts of her empire, 16. her authority over her people, 17. her conquests, ibid. she puts the government into her son's hands, and retires from the sight of mankind, 19. difference between Semiramis and Sardanapalus, 25.

Sempronius, consul, is defeated by Hannibal near Trebia, I. 239.

Senate. Carthaginian senate, I. 111. senate of Sparta, II. 294. senate of Athens, III. 516. senate of Rome described by Cines, V. 333.

Sennacherib, king of Nineveh, declares war against Hezekiah, and reduces Jerufalem to extremities, II. 28. he writes to Hezekiah a letter full of blasphemies against the God of Israel, and marches against the king of Egypt, whose dominions he ravages, 29. he returns against Jerufalem, 30. his army is destroyed.
INDEX.

Sertorius, Roman general, makes a treaty with Mithridates, VII. 178, 179
Servilius serves in the Roman army in quality of proconsul, I. 240. He is killed in the battle of Cannae, 251
Sesac, or Sesonchis, king of Egypt, I. 79. He marches against Jerusalem, and carries away all its treasures, ibid. &c.
Sesostris, king of Egypt, his education, I. 69. His conquests, 70. His works beneficial to Egypt, 72. His blind fondness for his own grandeur, 73. His death, ibid.
Setbon, king of Egypt, causes himself to be consecrated high-priest of Vulcan, and abandons himself entirely to superlition, I. 84. Miraculous manner in which Herodotus relates, that he was delivered from Sennacherib's irruption into his dominions, ibid. &c. Death of Setbon, 84
Sethosis. See Sesostris.
Seuthes, prince of Thrace, is re-establish'd in his father's dominions by Xenophon, III. 355. Perfidy of that prince to Xenophon and his troops, ibid.
Seventy. Version of the Seventy, V. 320
Shepherds. They were in great confederation in Egypt, I. 50. and in India, V. 3
Shinar, plain where Babylon was built, II. 4, 242
Ship, galley, vessel. Ship-building of the ancients, III. 546, &c.
Sertorius, Roman general, makes a treaty with Mithridates, V. 271, 272.
Sicaniars, people of Spain; they come to settle in Sicily, III. 177
Sicily, island of the Mediterranean: Description of it, I. 140. Different people that inhabited it, III. 177
Sicyon, city of Peloponneus: Its kings, II. 281. It is delivered from tyranny, and united to the Achaean league by Aratus, V. 406. Sicyon was long in great reputation for arts and sciences, 409
Sidon, city of Phoenicia, I. xxxii. Despair of the Sidonians when they see Ochus master of their city, IV. 226. They submit to Alexander, 421
Sieges. Famous sieges of antiquity; of Carthage by the Romans, I. 315, &c. of Babylon by Cyrus, II. 137. of the same city by Darius, 378. of Platea by the Lacedaemonians, III. 121, 134. of Syracuse by the Athenians, 200. of the same city

Froyed by an angel, II. 30. He is murdered by his own children, 31
Septimius, Roman officer in the service of Ptolemy king of Egypt, affixes Pompey, VII. 250, 251
Septuagint, some account of it, V. 319, &c.
Serafis, divinity adored in Egypt, V. 283. His image is brought from Pontus to Alexandria, ibid.
Sevon, general of Antiochus Epiphanes, is defeated by Judas Maccabæus, and killed in the battle, VI. 269
Sertorius, Roman general, makes a treaty with Mithridates, VII. 178, 179
Servilius serves in the Roman army in quality of proconsul, I. 240. He is killed in the battle of Cannæ, 251
Sesac, or Sesonchis, king of Egypt, I. 79. He marches against Jerusalem, and carries away all its treasures, ibid. &c.
Sesostris, king of Egypt, his education, I. 69. His conquests, 70. His works beneficial to Egypt, 72. His blind fondness for his own grandeur, 73. His death, ibid.
Setbon, king of Egypt, causes himself to be consecrated high-priest of Vulcan, and abandons himself entirely to superlition, I. 84. Miraculous manner in which Herodotus relates, that he was delivered from Sennacherib's irruption into his dominions, ibid. &c. Death of Setbon, 84
Sethosis. See Sesostris.
Seuthes, prince of Thrace, is re-establish'd in his father's dominions by Xenophon, III. 355. Perfidy of that prince to Xenophon and his troops, ibid.
Seventy. Version of the Seventy, V. 320
Shepherds. They were in great confederation in Egypt, I. 50. and in India, V. 3
Shinar, plain where Babylon was built, II. 4, 242
Ship, galley, vessel. Ship-building of the ancients, III. 546, &c.
Sertorius, Roman general, makes a treaty with Mithridates, V. 271, 272.
Sicaniars, people of Spain; they come to settle in Sicily, III. 177
Sicily, island of the Mediterranean: Description of it, I. 140. Different people that inhabited it, III. 177
Sicyon, city of Peloponneus: Its kings, II. 281. It is delivered from tyranny, and united to the Achaean league by Aratus, V. 406. Sicyon was long in great reputation for arts and sciences, 409
Sidon, city of Phoenicia, I. xxxii. Despair of the Sidonians when they see Ochus master of their city, IV. 226. They submit to Alexander, 421
Sieges. Famous sieges of antiquity; of Carthage by the Romans, I. 315, &c. of Babylon by Cyrus, II. 137. of the same city by Darius, 378. of Platea by the Lacedaemonians, III. 121, 134. of Syracuse by the Athenians, 200. of the same city

Froyed by an angel, II. 30. He is murdered by his own children, 31
Septimius, Roman officer in the service of Ptolemy king of Egypt, affixes Pompey, VII. 250, 251
Septuagint, some account of it, V. 319, &c.
Serafis, divinity adored in Egypt, V. 283. His image is brought from Pontus to Alexandria, ibid.
Sevon, general of Antiochus Epiphanes, is defeated by Judas Maccabæus, and killed in the battle, VI. 269
Sertorius, Roman general, makes a treaty with Mithridates, VII. 178, 179
Servilius serves in the Roman army in quality of proconsul, I. 240. He is killed in the battle of Cannæ, 251
Sesac, or Sesonchis, king of Egypt, I. 79. He marches against Jerusalem, and carries away all its treasures, ibid. &c.
Sesostris, king of Egypt, his education, I. 69. His conquests, 70. His works beneficial to Egypt, 72. His blind fondness for his own grandeur, 73. His death, ibid.
Setbon, king of Egypt, causes himself to be consecrated high-priest of Vulcan, and abandons himself entirely to superlition, I. 84. Miraculous manner in which Herodotus relates, that he was delivered from Sennacherib's irruption into his dominions, ibid. &c. Death of Setbon, 84
Sethosis. See Sesostris.
Seuthes, prince of Thrace, is re-establish'd in his father's dominions by Xenophon, III. 355. Perfidy of that prince to Xenophon and his troops, ibid.
Seventy. Version of the Seventy, V. 320
Shepherds. They were in great confederation in Egypt, I. 50. and in India, V. 3
Shinar, plain where Babylon was built, II. 4, 242
Ship, galley, vessel. Ship-building of the ancients, III. 546, &c.
Sertorius, Roman general, makes a treaty with Mithridates, V. 271, 272.
Sicaniars, people of Spain; they come to settle in Sicily, III. 177
Sicily, island of the Mediterranean: Description of it, I. 140. Different people that inhabited it, III. 177
Sicyon, city of Peloponneus: Its kings, II. 281. It is delivered from tyranny, and united to the Achaean league by Aratus, V. 406. Sicyon was long in great reputation for arts and sciences, 409
Sidon, city of Phoenicia, I. xxxii. Despair of the Sidonians when they see Ochus master of their city, IV. 226. They submit to Alexander, 421
Sieges. Famous sieges of antiquity; of Carthage by the Romans, I. 315, &c. of Babylon by Cyrus, II. 137. of the same city by Darius, 378. of Platea by the Lacedaemonians, III. 121, 134. of Syracuse by the Athenians, 200. of the same city
INDEX.

city by Marcellus, VII. 116.
of Tyre by Alexander, IV.
426. of Rhodes by Demetrius,
V. 230. of Athens by Sylla,
VII. 156

Signals by fire. Manner of making signals by fire,
V. 569

Simon, surnamed the Just, succeeds his father Onias in the high-priesthood of the Jews,
V. 261. his death,
271
Simon; son of Mattathias, VI.
261. he is chosen general in the room of his brother Joathan, and marches against Tryphon, 487. he is made high-priest and prince of Judæa, 489.
he renews the ancient treaties with the Romans, ibid. 494.
death of Simon,
505 Simon, Jew, has the guard of the temple given him: His treachery,
VI. 235
Simonides, Greek poet; his answer to Hiero, who asked him what God was, III. 81. Siimonides preserved by the Gods,
I. lxxxix, xc

Sinatrocces, king of the Parthians,
VII. 27
Sisoes, city of Pontus. Lucullus gives it liberty,
VII. 194
Sisyphus, son of Æolus, makes himself master of Corinth, II.
286

Sitalces, king of the Odyssians in Thrace, makes an alliance with the Athenians, III. 108, 109

Slavery. Slave. Slavery incompatible with the study of philosophy, III. 83. the highest price that can be paid for it, cannot reconcile free men to it, IV. 523. what happens to such as have once submitted to a state of servitude,
VI. 237

Smerdis, or Tanaoxares, son of Cyrus, is made governor of several provinces by his father
Cyrus, II. 165. Cambyse causes him to be put to death, 184

Smerdis the Magus passes for the son of Cyrus, and ascends the throne of Persia, II. 188, 189,
190. his imposture is discovered,
192. he is killed by the compi-trators;
193

Smerdones, one of the six generals of Xerxes's army in that prince's expedition against Greece,
II. 461

Smyrna, city of Æolis, II. 288

Socrates, prince of the philolosphers; His birth, III. 330. He applies at first to sculpture, ibid.
then to the study of the sciences, ibid. his wonderful progress in them, 431. his taste for moral philosophy, ibid. his character, 432. his employments, ibid. his sufferings from the ill temper of his wife, 434. Dæmon or familiar spirit of Socrates, 436.
The Delphick oracle declares him the wisest of mankind, 439.
Socrates distinguishes himself at the battle of Potidaæ, and at that of Delium, III. 60, 156, 157. his intimacy with Alcibiades, 164. he devotes himself totally to the instruction of the Athenian youth, 441. attachment of his disciples to him, 443. admirable principles which he gives them upon government and religion, 444, 448, 449.
he indistinctly applies himself to discredit the sophists in the opinion of the Athenian youth, 450. what we are to understand by the ironical manner ascribed to him, 451. Socrates is accused of holding bad opinions concerning the gods, and of corrupting the youth of Athens, 453, &c. he defends himself without art or meanness, 458.
he is condemned to die, 459.
INDEX.

he refuses to escape out of prison, III. 468. he passes the last day of his life in discoursing with his friends upon the immortality of the soul, 473, &c. he drinks the hemlock, 479. punishment of his accusers, 481. Honours rendered to his memory by the Athenians, ibid. reflections upon the sentence passed on Socrates by the Athenians, and upon Socrates himself, ibid. relation between the death of Socrates, and that of the governor of Tigranes, II. 90, 91 Socrates of Achaia commands a body of Greek troops in the expedition of Cyrus the Younger against his brother Artaxerxes, III. 319. he is seized by treachery, and put to death, 341 Socrates, son of Nicomedes, dethrones his brother Nicomedes king of Bithynia, VII. 149 Sogdiana, province of Upper Asia, I. xxx. Alexander makes himself master of it, IV. 538. it revolts against that prince, ibid. great courage of thirty young Sogdian prisoners condemned to die by Alexander, 546, &c. Sogdianus, natural son of Artaxerxes Longimanus, kills Xerxes II. and ascends the throne of Persia in his stead, III. 147. he puts Bagorazus, one of his father's counsels, to death, 148. he is dethroned by Ochus, who cauceso to be stifled in ashes, ibid. &c. Solyer year. At what time it began to be used, I. 49 Soldiers. Employment and exercises of the soldiers in their camp, VI. 353, 354 Solon, one of the seven sages of Greece, is elected archon and legislator by the Athenians, II. 322. government which he institutes at Athens, ibid. &c. laws which he gives the Athenians, 327. travels of Solon into Egypt and Lydia, 61, 62, 331. his conduct at the court of Croesus, ibid. conversation of Solon with Thales upon marriage, 320, 321. at his return to Athens he finds every thing changed, 331. he endeavours to make Pheidias abdicate the tyranny in vain, 334. death of Solon, ibid. Solius, Lacedæmonian, preceptor to Hannibal, I. 203. he accompanies Hannibal in his expeditions, and composes the history of that great captain, ibid. Southey's. Reflection upon the events of some of their predictions, V. 72 Sophists. Definition of the sophists, III. 450 Sophocles, one of the Athenian generals, is banished for not having attempted the conquest of Sicily, III. 175 Sophocles, tragick poet, he disputes the prize with Æschylus, and carries it against him, I. ciii, III. 10. his death, I. ciii. tragedies of his come down to us, civ. in what manner he defended himself in a very advanced age against the ingratitude of his children, ibid. character of Sophocles; civit Sophonisba, Aedubal's daughter, is married to Syphax, I. 296. Masinissa having conquered Syphax, marries Sophonisba, and to save her from falling into the hands of the Romans, is reduced to lend her poison, ibid. Sophronisbus, the father of Socrates the philosopher, III. 430 Sophrosyne, daughter of Dionysius the Elder, is married to her brother, Dionysius the Younger, IV. 47
Sornatius, one of Lucullus's officers, commands in Pontus during the absence of that general, VII. 195

Sosides, Ptolemy Philopator's minister, cauﬂes Arsinoe the king's sister and wife to be murdered, V. 503. he is obliged to quit his employment, ibid. he prevents that prince from aiding Cleomenes, and advises him to seize his person, 510

Sosies, son of the former, has the care of the person of the young king Ptolemy Epiphanes, VI. 3

Sosis, one of the chief conspirators against Hieronymus, seizes part of the quarter Achradina, and exhorts the Syracusans to recover their liberty, VII. 106. he is chosen one of the principal magistrates, 108. he commands the troops sent to the aid of Marcellus, 115

Sosius (Caius) conﬁal, declares for Anthony, and goes to him, VII. 277

Sosthenes, Macedonian, drives the Gauls out of Macedonia, and reigns there during some time, V. 313. he is overpowered by the great number of Brennus's troops, 314

Sostratus, architect, builds the tower of Pharos, V. 282. deceit which he uses for engrossing the whole honour of that work to himself, I. 26, 27

Sostratus, or Sesistratus, governor of Syracuse, delivers up that city to Pyrrhus, V. 345. Pyrrhus, to make him amends, is for putting him to death, 357

Sotaides, satyrick poet, V. 296.

Jut punishment which he receives for his calumnies, 297

Soul. Discourse of Socrates before his death upon the immortality of the soul, III. 475

Sous, king of Sparta, with his colleague Agis, takes the city of Elis, 1. cxl

Spain. Description of Spain, I. 137. mines of gold and silver, 119. the Carthaginians make themselves masters of part of Spain, 139. it is entirely conquered by the Romans, 266

Sparta. See Lacedaemon.

Spendidus of Capua, in concert with Mathos, cauﬂes the mercenaries to revolt against the Carthaginians, I. 201. he is placed at their head, ibid. he puts Gisgo to death, 205. he treats with the Carthaginians, 207. he is seized and hanged, ibid.

Speusippus, philosopher, Plato's nephew, his intimacy with Dion, IV. 70

Sphaereria, small island over against Pylos, III. 139

Spherus, philosopher, affilts Cleomenes in reinﬂating the ancient discipline in Sparta, V. 449

Sphodrias, Lacedæmonian, who commanded in Theopile, forms a fruitlesse enterprize against the Piræus, IV. 134, &c. he is acquitted for that attempt by the credit of Agesilaus, 156

Spirit. Familiar spirit of Socrates, III. 436

Spitamenes, conﬁdent of Brutus, forms a conspiracy against him, and delivers him up to Alexander, IV. 534, &c. he raises Bactria against that prince, 538. his wife not being able to persuade him to surrender himself to Alexander, kills him in the night, 559

Spithridates, one of Artemides Mnemon's principal oﬃcers, goes over to Agesilaus, and does him great services, III. 385. offended at the excessive severity of Heippiidas, he retires to Sardis, 386

Spithrobatas, satrap of Ionia, and son in-law of Darius, diﬁnguishes
INDEX.

A nguishes himself by his valour
at the battle of the Granicus, IV. 380. Alexander lays him death with his lance, ibid.
Stadium, Greek and Roman measure or furlong, I. Ixxviii Stagira, city of Macedonia, Ari-Stoé’s country, destroyed by Philip, and rebuilt by Alexander, IV. 354
Stagira, Stalcrata, Stater, States. See Kingdoms.
Statira, wife of Arraxerxes Mnemon, revenge which she takes for the death of her brother Teriteuchmes, III. 297, 298. she is poisoned by Parisa-tis, 302
Statira, wife of Darius, falls into Alexander’s hands, IV.
413. death of that prince, 469
Statira, eldest daughter of Da-rus, marries Alexander the Great, V. 53. she is murdered
by the intrigues of Roxana, 115
Statira, sister of Mithridates, receives orders from that prince to die, VII. 188. she dies cou-rageously, 189
Statarius. See Sculptors.
Stesagoras, eldest son of Cimon, is exalted sovereign of the Thracian Cherfonesus by his uncle Miltiades, II. 417
Sthenelus, king of Mycenae,
II. 282
Stilpon of Megara, philosopher,
V. 216
Stirrups. The use of them unknown to the ancients, III. 544
Stratius, physician, goes to Rome with Attalus, VI. 388.
his wife remonstrances prevent that prince from asking to share the kingdom of Pergamus with his brother Eumenes, 389, &c.
Stratonice, daughter of Demerius, marries Seleucus, V.
262. that prince gives her to his son Antiochus, 306, 307 Stratonice, one of the wives of Mithridates, submits to Pompey, VII. 227. revenge Mithridates takes of her, ibid.
Sua, king of Ethiopia. See Sa-bacus.
Submission: Means for inspiring it, II. 81. manner of exacting the submission of nations by the Perfians, 401, 402, 422, 455
Suffetes, chief magistrate of the Carthaginians, I. 110
Sulpitius (P.) Roman praefor, is sent against Philip, V. 554. different actions of Sulpitius in Macedonia, 555. he is elected conful, and goes into Macedonia, VI. 13. he gains a con-derable victory over Philip, 21 Sulpitius Gallus, tribune of the Roman army against Perseus, foretells an eclipse to the troops,
VI. 361. the senate commissions him to inspect secretly into the conduct of Eumenes and Antiochus, 406. his imprudent conduct in executing that commis-

Sun, profound reverence with which the Perfians adored that star, II. 248
Superstition. Its great effect upon the minds of the populace, IV.
473, 474
Supreme Good. See Good.
Surena, general of the army of the Parthians, gains a great victory over Craesus, VII. 38. Orodes, jealous of his glory, puts him to death, 56. praise of Suren, ibid.

Surveying

Syracuse, city of Sicily: Its foundation, III. 177. description of that city, 197. history of Syracuse to the reign of Gelon, VII. 136. reigns of Gelon, III. 73. of Hiero, I 79. of Tharsybalus, 83; siege of Hiero by the Athenians, 202. the city is reduced to extremities, 210. the arrival of Gylippus changes the face of affairs, 211. the Syracusans make themselves matters of the Athenian army, and put the two generals to death, 237, &c. Dionyfus makes himself tyrant of Syracuse, IV. 4. ineffectual attempts of the Syracusans against him, 13, 15, 30, 31. Dionyfus the Younger succeeds his father, 52. Dion expels him, 69, &c. horrid ingratitude of the Syracusans to Dion, 79, 80. Dionyfus the Younger reafcends the throne, 97. Syracuse implores the aid of the Corinthians, who send them Timoleon, 99. that general reinstates the liberty of the city, 108, 109. Agathocles usurps supreme authority at Syracuse, I. 161. after the death of that tyrant Syracuse recovers its liberty, VII. 138. it calls in the aid of Pyrrhus against the Carthaginians, I. 172, V. 348. it chuses Hiero II. king, VII. 82. mildness of his reign, 86. Hieronymus succeeds Hiero, 101. troubles at Syracuse after the death of Hieronymus, 109. Syracuse besieged and taken by Marcellus, 115, 131. reflections upon the government and character of the Syracusans, 142

Syria, province of Aha, I. xxxii. it is reduced into a Roman province, VI 544

Syrgambis, mother of Darius, is taken prisoner by Alexander, after the battle of Issus, IV. 412. L 1
the cannot survive the death of Alexander, V. 77, 78
Systemethres, governor of the rock Corinææ, submits to Alexander, V. 558

T.
Tachos ascends the throne of Egypt, IV. 193, he raises troops to defend himself against the king of Persia, ibid. he obtains troops from the Lacedæmonians, who are commanded by Agephilus, ibid. 184. seeing himself abandoned by Agephilus, he quits Egypt, and retires to the court of Persia, 193. Artaxerxes pardons him, and gives him the command of his troops against the rebels, ibid.

Tacticks: Wherein that art consists, II. 227, V. 560
Talhbythus, Agamemnon's herald, honoured as a god at Sparta, II. 424
Tamos, Egyptian, commands the fleet of Cyrus the Younger in that prince's expedition against his brother, III. 319
Tanagra, city of Boeotia, near which the Athenians defeated the Spartans, II. 38
Tanaoxares, son of Cyrus. See Smerdis.
Tarentum, city of Italy, I. cxlv. the Tarentines call in Pyrrhus to their aid against the Romans, V. 323, 324. that prince leaves a garrison in their city, 344
Taractenia, part of the ancient Spain, I. 137
Tarfas, city of Cilicia, subjected by Alexander, V. 391
Taurion, one of the confidants of Philip, poisons Aratus by that prince's order, V. 547
Taxilus, Indian king, puts himself under the protection of Alexander, V. 12, he accompanies that prince in his expedition against Porus, ibid. 13. Alexander sends him to Porus to persuade him to submit, 21. Porus is reconciled to Taxilus

34

Taxilus, one of the generals of Mithridates, joins Archelaus, and is defeated by Sulla, VII. 161, 165
Tegæa, city of Arcadia, II. 274, war between its inhabitants and those of Mantinea, IV. 172, 173
Tegyra, city of Boeotia, battle between the Thebans and Lacedæmonians near it, IV. 138
Telearch, office amongst the Thebans: What it was, IV. 155
Telecles, king of Lacedæmon, affianced to the Meffenians, I. cxliii, cxliv
Telchops, glafs for seeing remote objects: Invention of it, V. 580
Teleutias is declared admiral of the Lacedæmonian fleet by the credit of Agephilus his brother by the mother's side, III. 401. he besieges Corinth by sea, ibid. he is sent against Olynthus in the room of Phœbidas, IV. 122. he is killed in battle, ibid.
Tellenius, citizen of Athens, esteemed most happy, and why, II. 62.
Telys, Sybarite, occasions the ruin of his country, III. 91, 92
Temple, famous ones of Greece, IV. 351
Ten. Council of Ten established at Athens, III. 308
Tennes, king of Sidon, delivers up that city to Ochus, IV. 226, Ochus, to reward his treason, puts him to death, ibid.
Tenth. Custom among the Greeks of giving the tenth to the gods, II. 510
Terence, Latin poet: Abridgment of his life, I. 125
Terillus,
INDEX.

Terillus, tyrant of Himera, deprived of his power by Theron, engages the Carthaginians to invade Sicily, III. 74

Teriteuchmes, brother of Statira, wife of Artaxerxes, marries Hamellris, daughter of Darius, III. 298. tragical history of Teriteuchmes, ibid.

Teuta, after the death of Agron her husband prince of Illyrium, reigns in his stead, V. 419. her gross insult on the Romans in the persons of their ambassadors, ibid. she is obliged to demand peace of them, and obtains it, 420

Thaïs, famous courtezan born in Attica, occasions the burning of the palace of Persepolis, in a party of debauch with Alexander, IV. 501, 502

Thales of Miletus, philosopher; reasons that prevented him from marrying, II. 320, 321. founder of the Ionick sect, 352, 353

Thalestris, queen of the Amazons, comes from a remote country to visit Alexander, IV. 519

Tharac, king of Ethiopia, after the death of Sathon, I. 84

Tharsis, second son of Javan, settles in Greece, II. 279

Thasus, island in Thrace, revolts against the Athenians, III 15. Cimon obliges it to submit, ibid.

Theano, priestess at Athens, refuses to curse Alcibiades, III. 194

Thearides, brother of Dionylius the Elder, is sent to Olympia by that tyrant to dispute the prizes of poetry and the chariot-race, IV. 40, 41

Theatre. Description of the theatre of the ancients, I. cxxi. declamation or speaking of the theatre composed and set to notes, cxxvi

Thebai, part of Egypt, I. 2

Thebe, wife of Alexander, tyrant of Phææ, obtains permission of her husband to see and converse with Pelopidas, IV. 165. her conversations with that Theban make her conceive an aversion for her husband, ibid. she makes her three brothers assassinate the tyrant, 172

Thebes, city of Boetia in Greece: Its foundation, II. 204. kings of Thebes, ibid. the Thebans besiege Plataæa, III. 99. they gain a victory over the Athenians near Delium, 156. they give refuge to the Athenians, who fled after the taking of their city by Lyfander, 307. they enter into a league with Tithraustes against the Lacedæmonians, 389. valour of the Thebans at the battle of Coronea, 598. they are compelled by the treaty of Antalcides to give the cities of Boeotia their liberty, IV. 117. Thebes falls into the hands of the Lacedæmonians, 119. Pelopidas reinstates its liberty, 126. the Thebans gain a considerable advantage over the Lacedæmonians near Tegea, 158. they destroy Plataæa and Thefpiæ, 140. they defeat the Lacedæmonians, and put them to flight at the battle of Leuctra, 145. they ravage Laconia, and advance to the gates of Sparta, 151, 152. they send Pelopidas to the court of Persia, and obtain the title of friends and allies of the king, 157, 158. they make Alexander tyrant of Phææ submit, 161. The Thebans make a second attempt against Sparta, IV. 173. they gain a great victory over the Lacedæmonians near Mantinea, 178, &C. they aid Aratus against the king of Persia, 207. they call in Philip to their aid aid against the Phocaeans, IV. 286. The Thebans, Messenians, and Argives, enter into an alliance with Philip to attack Peloponnesus, 300. the Thebans join the Athenians against Philip, 324. they are defeated near Chersonæs, 326. Philip puts a garrison into their city, 328. the Thebans, after the death of that prince, put part of the garrison to the sword, 363. Alexander marches against them, and destroys their city, 364, &c. re-establishment of Thebes by Cassander, V. 178. the Thebans make an alliance with the Romans in the war against Perseus, VI. 308. they surrender themselves to the Romans, 326. Sylla deprives them of half their territory, VII. 166 Thespis of a certain kind permitted and even commanded to the young Lacedæmonians, II. 301. it was the most severely punished of all crimes by the Scythians, 385 Theomistocles, Athenian, distinguishes himself at the battle of Marathon, II. 429. he removes Epicydes from the command, and causes himself to be elected general in his stead, 467. he supports the decree to recall Aristedes, 468. he resigns the honour of commanding the fleet to the Lacedæmonians, 469. he determines the Athenians to abandon their city, 481. he determines the Greeks to fight in the strait of Salamin, 483, 485. the Lacedæmonians decree the prize of wisdom to him, after the victory at Salamin, 492. acclamations with which he is received at the Olympic games, 493. he renews the works of Athens, and fortifies the Piræus, 519, 521. Black design which he conceives for supplanting the Lacedæmonians, 522. he is banished Athens, 531. the Athenians and Lacedæmonians uniting against him as an accomplice in the conspiracy of Pausanias, he takes refuge with Admetus, 533. he retires to Artaxerxes, III. 3. his great credit with that prince, 5, &c. he kills himself, 17. character of Themistocles, II. 418, 493, 531, III. 18. his great moderation on many occasions, H. 469, 485 Theomistocles, magistrate of Syracuse, conspires with Andranodorus to seize the sovereignty, VII. 109. he is killed by order of the other magistrates, ibid. THENON, commander of the citadel of Syracuse, surrenders himself to Pyrrhus, V. 345. that prince puts him to death, 346, 347 Theocritus, poet at the court of Hiero, VII. 93, 94 Theodorus, chief of the Eumolpidae at Athens: What he ventured to say in respect to the maledictions or curies, III. 262 Theodorus, citizen of Syracuse, ventures to declare himself openly against Dionysius in favour of liberty, IV. 31 Theodorus, uncle of Heraclides, is deputed by him to Dion to conjure him to return to the aid of Syracuse, IV. 85. he puts himself into Dion's hands, 86. Dion pardons him, 87 Theodorus, governor of Bactriana, revolts against Antiochus, and causes himself to be declared king of that province, V. 376. he dies, 397 Theodotus, son of the former, succeeds his father, V. 397. he forms a league offensive and defensive with Arfaces, ibid. Theodotus is charged by Antiochus with the war against Mole,
INDEX.

Molo, V. 482. he is defeated, and obliged to abandon the field of battle, ibid.

Theodotus, Etolian, governor of Coelosyria for Ptolemy, defends the entrance into that province against Antiochus, and obliges that prince to retire, V. 483. he is accused, and obliged to go to the court of Egypt to give an account of his conduct, 491, 492. in resentment for that affront, he declares for Antiochus, and puts the cities of Tyre and Ptolemais into his hands, 492. he enters the camp of Ptolemy in the night with design to kill him, 496. he fails in that attempt, and escapes to his camp, ibid.

Theodotus, one of the principal conspirators against the life of Hieronymus, is put to the rack, and dies without discovering any of his accomplices, VII. 104

Theodotus, preceptor to the late Ptolemy, advises that prince to put Pompey to death, VII. 250. he goes to present the head of that Roman to Caesar, 252

Theogiton, of Megara, gives the Greeks wife advice after the battle of Platæa, II. 507

Theophrastus, Antigonus's general, refuses to quit Corinth, V. 417. Aratus causes him to be put to death, ibid.

Theophrastus, philosopher, his dispute with an old woman of Athens, in buying something of her, III. 553

Theopompus, king of Sparta, commands in the war against the Argives, I. cxiii. then against the Meffeniæans, cxxiv. he is defeated, taken prisoner, and put to death by Artemomenes, cxxix. establishes the Ephori, II. 295

Theopompus, disciple of Iocrates, gains the prize of eloquence over his master, and has the weaknesses and vanity to brag of it, IV. 219

Theoxena, Thessalian lady, daughter of Herodicus, marries Paris, VI. 205. tragical and courageous end of Theoxena, 206

Theramenes, one of the Athenian generals, is charged with the care of burying the dead after the battle of the Arginusæ, III. 276. not being able to execute that order, he makes the other generals responsible for it, and accuses them at Athens, 277. he is deputed to Lyfander during the siege of Athens, 290. he opposes the violence of his colleagues, and draws their hatred upon himself, 304. he is accused by Critias, and put to death, 305

Therma, capital city of Etolia, taken by surprize, and ravaged by Philip, V. 525, 526

Thermopylaæ, pass of mount Æta in Thessaly, II. 470. battle of Thermopylaæ between the Lacedæmonians and Xerxes, 472, &c. victory of the Romans over Antiochus near Thermopylaæ, VI. 106

Theron, tyrant of Agrigentum, makes an alliance with Gelon, and gains in conjunction with him a great battle over the Carthaginians, III. 74

Theseus, king of Athens, II. 284. he dies in the island of Scyros, whither he had been obliged to fly, III. 10. Cimon brings his bones to Athens, ibid.

Thesmophoræ, Athenian magistrates, III. 521

Theseus, city of Achaia, ruined by the Thebans, IV. 139

Theseus, Greek poet, considered as the inventor of tragedy, I. xcviij. II. 333
INDEX.

Thessalonica, wife of Cassander, is killed by Antipater his eldest son, V. 269

Thessalus, third son of Pithaetutus, II. 336

Thessaly, province of ancient Greece, II. 273. the Thessalians submit to Xerxes, 470. they implore aid of the Thebans against Alexander of Pherae, IV. 161. Pelopidas delivers them from his power, ibid. they have recourse to Philip against their tyrants, 274. that prince delivers them, ibid.

Thesata, sister of Dionysius the Elder, and wife of Polyxenes: Courageous answer which he gives her brother upon the occasion of her husband's escape, IV. 32

Thesei, name of the lower class of people at Athens, III. 510

Thethmosis, or Amosis, having driven the king shepherds out of Egypt, reigns there, I. 67

Thimbron, Lacedaemonian general, marches against Thillaphernes and Pharnabasus, III. 356. upon some discontent he is recalled, 363

Thirty, Council of thirty established at Lacedaemon, II. 295, 308. thirty tyrants established at Athens by Lysander, III. 291. cruelties, which they commit in that city, 304. ThraSybulus drives them out of Athens, 307. they endeavour to reinstate themselves, and are all put to the sword, 309

Thoas, Etolian, charged with the execution of a design to seize Chalcis, fails in the attempt, VI. 94. he goes to Antiochus, and determines him to enter Greece, 97

Thrace, province of Europe; very singular customs of its inhabitants, II. 400. Thrace subjected by Philip, IV. 297, &c. king-

Thrace after Alexander's death, I. clxi

Thraso, confident of Hieronymus, is accused by Theodotus of having conspired against that prince, VII. 103, 104. he is put to death, 104

ThraSybulus, tyrant of Milletus, is besieged by Halysates, II. 60. stratagem which he uses to deliver himself from that siege, ibid.

ThraSybulus, brother of Gelon, reigns at Syracuse after Hiero's death, III. 85. he causes himself to be dethroned by his cruelty, ibid.

ThraSybulus is made general of the Athenians, III. 254. he accuses Alcibiades at Athens, and causes him to be deposed, 269. he quits Athens to avoid the cruelty of the thirty tyrants, 307. he expels the tyrants from that city, and reinstitutes its liberty, 307, &c.

ThraSybulus is made general of the Athenians, III. 254

Thracemené. Lake of Tuscany, famous for Hannibal's victory over the Romans, I. 240

Thucydides, Greek historian, he is commanded to go to the aid of Amphipolis, III. 155. the Athenians make it a crime in him to have suffered that city to be taken, and banish him, ibid.

Thucydides, brother-in-law to Cimon, is set up against Pericles by the nobility of Athens, III. 43. Pericles prevails to have him banished, 47

Thurium, city of Sicily: Its foundation, III. 47, 92

Thymbra, city of Lydia, famous for the battle between Cyrus and Croesus, II. 109

Thyrea, small territory of Greece, which occasioned the war between the Argives and Lacedaemonians, I. cxiii

Thybus,
INDEX.

Thyus, governor of Paphlagonia, revolts against Artaxerxes, IV. 422. he is conquered by Datames, 423.

Tiara of the kings of Persia, IV. 199.

Tiberius Gracchus is sent by the senate into Asia to examine into the conduct of Eumenes and that of Antiochus, VI. 406. See Gracchus.

Ticinus, river of Italy, near which P. Scipio was defeated by Hannibal, I. 231.

Tiglath Pilezer, king of Nineveh, II. 27. he aids Ahaz king of Judah against the kings of Syria and Israel, ibid.

Tigranes, son of a king of Armenia, obtains pardon for his father of Cyrus, II. 85; &c. he commands the Armenian troops, 89.

Tigranes, son of Tigranes, king of Armenia, is set at liberty by the Parthians on his father's death, and placed upon the throne, VI. 533. he accepts the crown of Syria, and wears it eighteen years, 536. he marries Cleopatra daughter of Mithridates, VII. 149. he invades the kingdom of Cappadocia, 70, 177. he gives Mithridates refuge, 190. the Romans declare war against him, 192. Tigranes is defeated by Lucullus, 201. he raises new troops in concert with Mithridates, 203. he is defeated a second time, 208. Pompey marches against him, and finds him at war with his son, 220. Tigranes submits his person and crown to the discretion of Pompey and the Romans, 221. Pompey leaves him part of his dominions, 222. Tigranes, son of the former, makes war with his father, VII. 220. he puts himself under the protection of Pompey, 221. not being satisfied with Pompey's decree, he endeavours to fly, 223. Pompey reserves him for his triumph, ibid.

Tigranocerta, city of Armenia, built by Tigranes, VII. 177. Lucullus takes it, and abandons it to be plundered by the soldiers, 202.

Tigris, river of Asia, IV. 471.

Timæa, wife of Agis: Excels of her passion for Alcibiades, III. 197.

Timagoras, deputed by the Athenians to the court of Persia, receives great presents, and is condemned to die at his return, IV. 158, 159.

Timandra, concubine, renders Alcibiades the last duties, III. 301, 302.

Timarchus, tyrant of Mileus, is conquered and killed by Antiochus Theos, V. 371, 372.

Timarchus, governor of Babylonia, revolts against Demetrius Soter, and is put to death, VI. 471.

Timasion is chosen one of the generals of the Greeks after the death of CLEARCHUS, III. 344.

Timasitheus, chief of the pirates of Lipara: His noble and religious behaviour in respect to the Romans, IV. 98.

Timenes, one of the principal Heracleides, re-enters Peloponnesus, II. 288. Argos falls to him by lot, ibid.

Timolea, Theban lady, her courageous action at the forming of Thebes, IV. 365.

Timocrates, friend of Dionysius the Younger, marries Dion's wife whilst he is banished, IV. 69. he flies on the approach of Dion, 74.

Timolaus of Corinth advices the cities in alliance against the Spartans to attack them in their own territory, III. 393.
INDEX.

Timoleon, Corinthian, sacrifices his brother Timophaes to his country, IV. 99, 100. the Corinthians send him to the aid of Syracuse, ibid. I. 156. he eludes the vigilance of the Carthaginians by a wife stratagem, IV. 103. he gains an advantage over the Carthaginians and Ictas near the city of Adranon, 104. he enters Syracuse, ibid. Dionysius surrenders himself to him, 105. Timoleon sends him to Corinth, ibid. he gains several victories over the Carthaginians, 107. &c. I. 157. he re-establishes the liberty of Syracuse, and institutes wife laws there, IV. 108. &c. he frees the other cities of Sicily from tyranny, 111, &c. he gains a great victory over the Carthaginians, 112. he is accused and cited to answer, 113. he quits his authority, and passes the rest of his life in retirement, 113, &c. he dies in it, 114. great honours rendered his memory, 114, &c. his praise, 115, &c. Timophaes, Corinthian, having made himself tyrant of his country, his brother Timoleon causes him to be assassinated, IV. 100.

Timothæus, son of Conon, is sent by the Athenians with a fleet to the aid of the Thebans, IV. 136. he ravages the coasts of Lacedaemon, and makes himself master of the island of Corcyra, ibid. he is employed by the Athenians in the war against the allies, 207, 208. he is accused by Chares, and sentenced to pay a great fine, 211. he retires to Chalcis, and dies there, 212. fine saying of Timothæus, 170. his praise, 207, 208.

Timothæus, lieutenant of Antiochus Epiphanes, is defeated by Judas Maccabeus, VI. 275. he is defeated a second time by the same captain in the reign of Antiochus Eupator, 461.

Timoxenes is chosen general of the Achæans in the room of Arratus, V. 451.

Tribasus, general of Artaxerxes Mnemon, determines that prince not to fly before his brother Cyrus, III. 323. he commands the fleet of Artaxerxes against Evagoras, and besieges that prince in Salamin, 411. he is falsely accused by Orontes, and carried to the court in chains, 412. trial of Tibrasus, 417. the king discovers his innocence, and restores him to his favour, 419. Tibrasus accompanies Artaxerxes in that prince's expedition against the Caduceans, ibid. his stratagem for making that people return to their obedience to the Persians, 420.

Tibrasus, satrap of western Armenia, incommodes the ten thousand Greeks in their retreat, III. 347, 348.

Tirintatechmus, son of Artabanus, one of the commanders of the army of Xerxes in that prince's expedition against Greece, II. 461.

Tisamenes, son of Orelus, reigns at Mycenæ with his brother Penthilus, II. 283.

Tisippus, Ætolian, is accused of having exercised great cruelties against those who had not taken party with the Romans against Perseus, VI. 396. Paulus Æmilius acquits him, 397.

Tissaphernes, Persian of quality, is appointed by Darius to reduce Phœnecia, governor of Lydia, III. 150.
INDEX.

150: he effects it, and has the government of Lydia for his reward, 151. he suffers himself to be seduced by the flattery of Alcibiades, and gives himself up entirely to him, 246. he concludes a treaty with the Peloponnesians, 252. he causes Alcibiades to be seized, and sent prisoner to Sardis, 257. he commands in the army of Artaxerxes Mnemon at the battle of Cannaxa, and distinguishes himself in it, 323, 327, 328. he takes upon him to reconduct the Greeks into their own country, 337. he seizes Clearcush and the other generals by treachery, and sends them to Artaxerxes, 341. he joins Pharnabazus to oppose the enterprizes of Dercyllidas, 367. he sends to command Agesilas to quit Asia, and to declare war against him in case of refusal, 380. he is defeated near Sardis, 382. he is treacherously accused, 383. Artaxerxes puts him to death, ibid. character of Tissaphernes, 150, 382

Tithraustes seizes Tissaphernes by order of Artaxerxes, and is placed at the head of the army in his stead, III. 383. he arms several states of Greece against the Lacedaemonians, 389, 380

Tobit is carried captive into Assyria, II. 28. he hides himself some time to avoid the cruelty of Sennacherib, 31. he foretells the ruin of Nineveh to his children, 32, 33

Tomyris, queen of the Scythians, II. 176. Herodotus relates that she caused Cyrus to be put to death, 176, &c.

Tragedy: Its origin, I. xcviii. its progress, ibid. II. 333. poets that distinguished themselves in tragedy, ibid.

Treaties. Odd custom of making treaties among the Iberians and Scythians, II. 383, 384

Trebia, river of Lombardy, famous for Hannibal's victory over the Romans, I. 234

Tremellius, surnamed Socrates, defeats and kills a third usurper of the kingdom of Macedonia, VI. 423

Trezena, city of Argolis, gives refuge to the Athenians who had lately abandoned their city, II. 482

Triarius, one of Lucullus's lieutenants, is defeated by Mithridates, VII. 210

Triballis, people of Mæsia, IV. 315. they pretend to share with Philip in the booty taken from the Scythians, ibid. they are defeated by that prince, ibid. they are defeated by Alexander, 393

Tributes. Reasons for the establishment of them, II. 217

Triarchs, Athenian officers: Their functions, IV. 242, 244

Trogillus, part of Syracuse, III. 260

Trophies erected by the ancients after a victory, I. lxii

Trophonius, hero, I. li. famous oracles of Trophonius in Bœotia, ibid.

Truth: Kind of punishment used by the Persians, III. 2

Troy, city of Asia, taken and burnt by the Greeks, II. 283

Tryphena, daughter of Phylacon, is married to Antiochus Grypus, VI. 517. she sacrifices her sister Cleopatra to her jealousy, 522. Antiochus of Cyzicium puts her to death in torments, ibid. Tryphena, daughter of Phylacon, is married to Antiochus Grypus, VI. 517. she sacrifices her sister Cleopatra to her jealousy, 522. Antiochus of Cyzicium puts her to death in torments, ibid. Tryphena, daughter of Phylacon, is married to Antiochus Grypus, VI. 517. she sacrifices her sister Cleopatra to her jealousy, 522. Antiochus of Cyzicium puts her to death in torments, ibid.

Tunis, city of Africa, is taken by Regulus, I. 182. the mercenaries revolting against Carthage make it their place of arms, 203

Tyche,
The index page contains text that is fragmented and difficult to read due to the orientation and resolution. However, it appears to be an index page from a book with entries and page numbers listed. Without clearer visibility of the text, it's challenging to transcribe accurately. The page seems to reference historical events, figures, and places, possibly from ancient history considering the names like Darius, Alexander, and Tyre. Given the nature of the index page, it likely serves as a guide to topics or entries within the book.
Women. Whether they ought to beadmitted to the administration of publick affairs, the command of armies, and the sovereignty of states, II. 20. See Ladies.
Wrestling. Exercise of wrestling among the ancients, I. lxxi Writing. Its beginnings, I. 55

X.
Xanthippus, Lacedæmonian, comes to the aid of the Carthaginians, I. 183. he defeats the army of Regulus, 186. he retires and disappears soon after, 187
Xanthippus, citizen of Athens, accuses Miltiades of treason, II. 434
Xanthippus, father of Pericles, abandoning Athens on the approach of Xerxes, his dog follows his ship to Salamis, and expires on the shore, II. 483
Xanthippus, Athenian, commands the fleet of the Greeks in conjunction with Leotychides king of Sparta, and gains a great victory over the Persians near Mycale, II. 513
Xanthippus, eldest son of Pericles, dies of the plague, III. 115
Xanthus, philosopher, whole flave Elop was, II. 350
Xanthippe, wife of Socrates: His sufferings from her ill humour, III. 434
Xenetas, Achæan, is sent against Molo and Alexander by Antiochus, V. 483. he falls into an ambuscade, and is cut to pieces with his whole army, ibid.
Xenocrates, philosopher, in what manner he was received by Antipater, to whom he had been sent ambassador by the Athenians, V. 125
Xenon is charged by Antiochus with the war against Molo, V. 482. he is defeated, ibid.
Xenon, Achæan, exclaims against the demand of the Roman commiffaries in an assembly, VI. 400
Xenophanes, Philip’s ambassador to Hannibal, falls into the hands of the Romans, V. 542. he escapes and concludes the treaty with Hannibal, 543. he is taken on his return by the Romans, ibid.
Xenophon, historian and philosopher; he engages in the service of Cyrus the Younger, III. 319. he commands the ten thousand Greeks after the death of Clearchus, and brings them back into their own country, 344. &c. he joins the Lacedæmonians in the war against Tissaphernes and Pharnabazus, 356. he acts under Agesilaus, at the battle of Coronea, 397. character of his style, II. 90. difference between Xenophon and Herodotus in their accounts of Cyrus, 175

Xerxes I. fon of Darius, is elected king of Persia in preference to his brother Artabazanes, II. 438. he confirms the Jews in their privileges, 442. he reduces Egypt, ibid. he prepares to invade Greece, ibid. he deliberates with his council concerning that expedition, 442, 443. wise speech of Artabanes to him, 444, 455. rage of Xerxes upon that occasion, 446. he discovers his error, and confesses it in full council, 447. the war is resolved, 449. Xerxes enters into an alliance with the Carthaginians, 451, I. 142. he begins his march, and gives orders for cutting a way through mount Athos, II. 451. his letter to that mountain upon that subject, 452. he advances to Sardis, ibid. his cruelty to Pythius, 454. he marches towards the Hellespont, 455. he causes the sea to be challeted for having broken the bridge of boats which he had laid over it, 457. he orders a second to be built, and passes
INDEX.

Z.

Abdiel, Arabian prince, betrays Alexander Bala, VI. 481. he delivers up Antiochus, son of Bala, to Tryphon, 485.
Zaleucus, legislator of the Locrions, III. 95. wisdom of his laws, ibid.
Zancle, city of Sicily, III. 178. See messene.
Zebina. See Alexander Zebina.
Zela, a city of Cappadocia, VII. 263.
Zeuxis, Dardanian, governor of Æolia under Pharnabazus, III. 364.
Zenodotus, librarian of Ptolemy Soter at Alexandria, V. 393.
Zerah, king of Ethiopia and Egypt, makes war with Afa king of Judah, and is defeated, I. 80.
Zeugitre, third clas of the citizens of Athens, III. 510.
Zippus, Hiero's son-in-law: His great credit with Hieronymus, VII. 103. he goes ambassador to Egypt, and stays there in voluntary banishment, 110, 111.
Zopyrus, Persian lord, mutilates himself for the service of Darius, II. 380. he makes that prince master of Babylon, 381. reward given by Darius for so great a service, ibid.
Zopyrus, slave of Pericles, and governor of Alcibiades, III. 166.
Zoroaster, founder of the sect of the Magi amongst the Persians, II. 252.
Zoroaster, another chief and reformer of the same sect, II. 252.
Zorobabel, chief of the Jews that return to Jerusalem after the decree of Cyrus, II. 158.
Cleaned & Oiled